RECEIVED

JAN 11 2008

2349

Dear BLM and WOPR advocates,

I think it's ridiculous, what a load of shit. We cant afford (I'm not talking about money) to harvest any more of our native trees.

I think part of management needs to be in schools. "Managing" the forests, to me, is educating people about them and protecting them as they are a community of animals that we need around for our own survival. Employ people to show our public that money is no substitute for nature, as we depend on nature MUCH more than we depend on money. Factory farming trees is not going to save us at all. Let's use our own wood instead of selling it away, and push for resource-policies that make sense in the LONG TERM. Tell people the truth, that big book of WOPR explanation is a load of SHIT! Did you hear from the University Professors? We don't have much real rainforest left, don't let the timber industry scare you, Lumberjacks can do other stuff too, and many of them cringe as they chop down trees wider in diameter than their cars. They need other jobs, but won't admit it until we say "NO MORE!!" to the money-hungry Timber Industry. NO MORE FOREST DEVASTATION!

—Max Smoot