

Where a fossil is found in the rock and what type of rock it was found in are as important to scientists as the fossil itself. Fossils can tell us an interesting story when clear observations and reports are made of its position in the rock. Storage of the fossil and its associated information in a proper facility or museum allows others to see, research and enjoy the fossil story through TV programs, articles and displays.