Comments:

Timber on federal lands is a valuable national resource. While it should be protected for recreational and conservation purposes, it should also be harvested to provide revenue to the federal government and economic stability to local communities. Sustainable harvesting practices should be utilized to gain the economic benefits as well as to protect the forests.

One of the recreational uses for BLM lands is OHV usage. Designation of OHV areas should be limited to areas far from residential communities. The noise pollution and fire danger presented by OHVs are not compatible with quiet, serene rural living. In order for any OHV area to be successful it must have funding for adequate enforcement.
