There is no reason to clearcut except for profit. Forest management should not be based on profit or their value be solely a dollar amount but rather a wholistic value based on life, animals, water, clean air, soil, all of the things provided by and contributed by a healthy, living, breathing forest. This would also rule out use of pesticides and herbicides which prevent necessary diversity of plant life within an ecosystem. More weight should be given to environmental experts on manangement vs that of industry funded (ie biased) \"research\" from unviversities and such. There needs to be consideration of what is going on in the world, not just the local community and short-sighted gains. Look at the fires in the midwest destroying their forestlands, the beetle problem killing huge amounts of forests, rainforest deforestation. Our forests here are becoming increasingly important in the face of the destruction facing all of us, please plan responsibly with everyone in mind vs just what's in this for me.
