BLM's proposed WOPR is about the worst plan of the decade, and that's really saying a lot.

Cut Old Growth when it's a non-renewable resource (and a potential World Heritage site)? Clear-cut any forest when we've got plenty of evidence that it scars and erodes our land for decades? Help more species become extinct (meaning gone forever)? Spread herbicides that get into our salmon streams and drinking-water supply? What are you people thinking, anyway? We've got an awful lot of younger stands of trees that will never look, feel, or provide varied habitat like an ancient, native forest. How about thinning some of those before you throw the baby out with the bath water?
