Sandy Ridge Trail System

INTRODUCTION

The Sandy Ridge Trail System provides new recreation opportunities for hikers and mountain bikers to explore the foothills of the Cascade Range.

In 2009, roughly 5 miles of singletrack trail were completed and are available for use. However, work is ongoing and portions of the trail may be partially completed. A bridge spanning Little Joe Creek (see map) has not yet been completed. Once finished, the system will contain over 15 miles and provide a variety of difficulty levels.

LOCATION

The trail system is located approximately 13 miles east of Sandy, OR and 40 miles east of Portland, OR within the Sandy River basin.

Elevations range from 1000 ft at the Barlow Wayside to 2260 ft at the top of Hide and Seek.

ACCESS

From the east side of Sandy, head east on US Highway 26 (Mt Hood Highway) for 11.4 miles and turn left on Sleepy Hollow Dr soon after a large sign indicating a left turn for Marmot (this will be the 2nd turnoff for Sleepy Hollow). Take the second right onto E Barlow Trail Rd and over the Sandy River.

After 1 mile on E Barlow Trail, look for a gate blocking a paved road (Homestead Rd/FS 14) on your left. Trails intersect with the paved Homestead Rd north of the gate.

RULES AND ETIQUETTE

Show respect for other users and the area. Trails are open to non-motorized use only (bicyclists and hikers). Be courteous and control your speed. Pack out all trash.

Public access to the Bull Run Watershed Management Unit (see map) is strictly prohibited and punishable under federal law.

SPECIAL FEATURES

Designed and built with assistance from the International Mountain Biking Association, the trail system offers trail features including bermed corners and jumps that can challenge all ability levels.

DIFFICULTY

Laura’s Loop (0.75) - Easiest

Hide and Seek Trail (4.25 miles) - Intermediate
