WATER FLOWS AND BOATING INFORMATION

The upper-most section of Clear Creek starts at the NEED Camp bridge, about two miles below Wkdayctown Dam in Wkdayctown National Recreation Area and ends at the Placer Street bridge over Clear Creek. This 5.5 mile section is very remote, rugged, and undeveloped canyon with several class IV rapids and one class V- rapid. All these rapids can be scouted or portaged with some difficulty.

From Placer Street two miles down to the Clear Creek Road bridge at Horsetown Clear Creek Preserve, the creek is easier and the rapids only reach a difficulty of class III+. This section is abundant wildlife and some class I rapids. The ACID canal siphons under the creek below China Gardens and running it may require more than class I skills. There is a rocky rapid at the creek immediately before the steep, rocky, dangerous Class VI gorge.

DO NOT ATTEMPT TO PADDLE OR FLOAT THIS UNRUNNABLE GORGE!

Just downstream from the Salmon Viewing Platform there is an access trail to the creek. From here down to Highway 273, it is a 1-mile flat characterized by thick creek-side vegetation, boulder-rippled and some class II rapids. The ACID canal empties under the creek below China Gardens and running it may require more than class III skills. There is a rocky rapid at the Highway 273 bridge, which may reach class III athletics, depending on the flow.
