Hi Rem,

All was quiet for a few months, but now there is heavy equipment driving and drilling up and down the main wash AND the beautiful little side canyon. By the time you order an environmental assessment there won't be much environment left! Maybe that is a strategy.

The community doesn't know exactly what KMC is allowed to do, and what is outside the regulations. Can you enlighten us?

Second question, and it is a fair one: what criteria does BLM set for declaring a "riparian" area? Please be straightforward.

Thanks, and best regards,

Here are a couple of photos and a short video, from today Feb 29 2016, showing the Kirkland Mining Company drilling into the left fork of Copper Basin Wash and inserting metal piping. There is equipment sitting in the main Copper Basin Wash. You told me to inform you of any activity that involved water ways or riparian habitat. This drilling may not be within the 5 acres of the so called “tailings pile” that the owner was suppose to be working on.

You said you would help and that there is another entity that watches over our waterways. These are the same washes that I have on the website showing massive water surges during storms.
I’m writing from my husbands email account since he had the photos uploaded.
I can be reached at bpleitgen@gmail.com

Thank you for your assistance in this matter.
