I live in Flower Mound, Texas, just south of the potential drilling site, just north of Lake Lewisville -- one of our water sources. This is too aggressive in my opinion. Water is a precious resource that we are running out of in our area. If it was contaminated, our population in this area would be in a dire situation. Water is as much of a precious resource as carbon fuels and to potentially jeopardize one to obtain another does not seem <sup>like a</sup> worthwhile gamble. There is concern over the structure of the Lake Lewisville Dam, and some link recent earthquakes in our area to fracking. Until there is definitive evidence that there is no link between fracking and local earthquakes, there should be no drilling anywhere near that dam. The risk is too great. Thank you for considering this local resident's opinion.

Sincerely,

Alisan Bowdouris
