I wonder if this could be fodder for those opposed to the EO to question the review.
Defer to you all but something to think about.
If I recall, FWS had a number of partners on this report so the timing may be difficult to change.

Laura-

Tomorrow, FWS along with several partners will release a study analyzing American engagement in and attitudes towards the outdoors, outdoor recreation and nature. The study of 10,000 families shows that the vast majority of American's rely on the outdoors for their physical health and emotional wellbeing, and as a key component of their children's education. More info is attached in the briefing paper and the draft study. They would like to include a quote from Secretary Zinke to incorporate in the quote sheet that will go out with the release. This was previously on Meg's radar. Rollout of the study is being led by DJ Case on behalf of all the study partners and timing is not under our direct control. Below is the Secretary's proposed quote with my edits.

Could you get approval of this quote or provide a re-write for Wednesday's release of the NoA study? Would like to have it tomorrow afternoon to send to the partners for incorporation into the quote sheet.

we have no control over timing whatsoever.

The very nature of the department is at odds with itself (as far as special interests are concerned) so we are going to always have that issue to deal with. Mitigate it where possible, but I don't think that this report damages/is damaged by the EO in anyway.

My takeaway from the report is that average people like to go outside, even if it's to the postage stamp park on the corner of a city block. However, excessively large and restrictive monument designations don't benefit the common family. They close off access for everyday people to enjoy the outdoors. Unless you're a skilled hiker who can do an all day pack, you're not really going to see bears ears because you can't drive there.

Assistant Secretary for Fish, Wildlife, and Parks (FWP) Is the "hallway".

In the hallway includes the National Park Service (NPS) and The Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS).

Current staff:

Virginia Johnson (has not been made permanent yet), is the current lead and will likely be

Principal DAS.

Aurelia Skipwith (sp?) is the DAS (and permanent). Currently focusing on FWS because of her background but that could change.

Casey Hammond, in FWS (not been made permanent, but will stay likely).

a key component of their children's education. More info is attached in the briefing paper and the draft study. They would like to include a quote from Secretary Zinke to incorporate in the quote sheet that will go out with the release. This was previously on Meg's radar. Rollout of the study is being led by DJ Case on behalf of all the study partners and timing is not under our direct control. Below is the Secretary's proposed quote with my edits.

Paul,

Could you get approval of this quote or provide a re-write for Wednesday's release of the NoA study? Would like to have it tomorrow afternoon to send to the partners for incorporation into the quote sheet.

In the hallway includes the National Park Service (NPS) and The Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS).

Current staff:

Virginia Johnson (has not been made permanent yet), is the current lead and will likely be Principal DAS.

Aurelia Skipwith (sp?) is the DAS (and permanent). Currently focusing on FWS because of her background but that could change.

Casey Hammond, in FWS (not been made permanent, but will stay likely).

Defer to you all but something to think about.
If I recall, FWS had a number of partners on this report so the timing may be difficult to change.

Laura-

Tomorrow, FWS along with several partners will release a study analyzing American engagement in and attitudes towards the outdoors, outdoor recreation and nature. The study of 10,000 families shows that the vast majority of American's rely on the outdoors for their physical health and emotional wellbeing, and as a key component of their children's education.
