Feds Outline Ways Policy Hampers Energy Development, A Longstanding Gripe In Wyoming.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (10/25, Richards) reports that in a report released Wednesday, the Interior Department identified "federal policies that impede energy development." Some "key western issues its officers say may need reform" include "sage grouse management, the permitting of oil and gas wells by the BLM and a proposed end or limitation on self-bonding for coal companies from the Office of Surface Mining, Reclamation and Enforcement." Kathleen Sgamma of the Western Energy Alliance "said the Interior report was a positive sign of what the agencies are doing to ease bureaucratic hurdles to energy exploration and production."

KATC-TV Lafayette, LA (10/25) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, "Developing our energy resources to grow our economy and protecting the environment are not mutually exclusive. However, while conducting the review outlined in the Executive Order, we found that several costly and burdensome regulations from the past threaten that balance by hampering the production or transmission of our domestic energy. Our public lands are meant to be managed for the benefit of the people. That means a multiple-use approach where appropriate and making sure that multiple-use includes energy development under reasonable regulations. Following President Trump's leadership, Interior is fostering domestic energy production by streamlining permitting and revising and repealing Obama-era job killing regulations – all while doing so in an environmentally responsible way."

U.S. Offers Record Lease Sale In Alaska Reserve To Oil, Gas Drillers.

Reuters (10/25, Gardner) reports the Interior Department is planning to hold a lease sale on December 6 for 900 tracts in the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska. The Alaska Dispatch News (10/25, DeMarban) reports the tracts contain 10.3 million acres, about half of the total reserve. The BLM said the size of the offering is the largest ever. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, "(The) unprecedented sale in Alaska will help achieve our goal of American energy dominance."

Also reporting are the AP (10/26), the Alaska Native News (10/25, Ellis-Wouters), the Alaska Public Radio Network (10/25, Harball), KTUU-TV Anchorage \(AK\) Anchorage, AK (10/25, Sullivan), and KTOO-FM Juneau \(AK\) Juneau, AK (10/25, Harball).

No Mention Of Climate Change In Interior's Draft Strategic Plan.

The Hill (10/25, Cama) reports a "draft version" of the five-year strategic plan for the Interior Department "does not mention anything about climate change, including whether the agency plans to fight it or how it will adapt." The draft "focuses heavily on plans to produce more fossil fuels and other forms of energy on public lands and the nation's outer continental shelf."

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington Examiner (10/25, Siciliano, Seigel), the New York Daily News (10/25, Brennan) and the Union of Concerned Scientists (10/25).

Nancy Pelosi Demands Probe Into Montana Firm's 'Highly Suspect' Contract To Repair Puerto Rico.

The Washington Examiner (10/25, Siegel) reports House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi yesterday "demanded an investigation into how a small Montana-based firm with ties to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke struck a $300 million deal to repair Puerto Rico's shattered electricity grid." Whitefish Energy agreed to a $300 million contract with PREPA "to rebuild 100 miles of power infrastructure across the island." In a statement Pelosi said, "All Americans should be concerned about the highly suspect Whitefish contract and the circumstances under which it was negotiated. ... Democrats demand Congress and the appropriate Inspectors General exercise their oversight role to get to the bottom of this suspicious agreement and hold this administration accountable for its dangerous lack of transparency in spending taxpayer money." The Washington Examiner (10/25, Siciliano) reports the Sierra Club also is "calling for probes of the contract in both the Senate and the House."

The Daily Caller (10/25, Bastasch) reports "Utah Republican Rep. Rob Bishop, chairman of the House Committee on Natural Resources, is heading to Puerto Rico this week to personally survey the desperate situation on the island." Committee spokesman Parish Braden said, "The size and unknown details of this contract raises numerous questions."

San Juan Mayor Calls To 'Void' Contract Awarded To Tiny Montana Company. The Hill (10/25, Henry) reports San Juan Mayor Carmen Yulín Cruz said the contract is "alarming." She told Yahoo News, "The contract should be voided right away and a proper process which is clear, transparent, legal, moral and ethical should take place."

Interior Department Proposes Doubling The Cost Of Visiting National Parks.

Bloomberg News (10/25, Traywick) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "wants to more than double the cost of visiting 17 of the most popular U.S. national parks when demand for them is the highest." Under the proposal, "visitors to the Grand Canyon, Zion, Yosemite, and 14 other national parks could be paying $70 during peak seasons instead of $30." Zinke "said his plan will raise $70 million in much-needed revenue for the National Park Service, which already suffers from a multibillion-dollar maintenance backlog." He said in a statement, "The infrastructure of our national parks is aging and in need of renovation and restoration. Targeted fee increases at some of our most-visited parks will help ensure that they are protected and preserved in perpetuity."

U.S. News & World Report (10/25, Trimble) reports that the National Park Service "said a park-specific annual pass for any of the 17 parks would be available for $75, while the cost of the annual yearlong pass, which provides entrance to all federal lands, would remain $80." However, "motorcycles and per person entrance fees could also see increases."

The San Francisco Chronicle (10/25, Alexander) reports that the plan is "meeting resistance from a number of Democrats, conservationists and social-justice advocates." Opponents argue the proposal will "price out visitors and deny many the opportunity to experience the nation's most coveted landmarks, from the Grand Canyon to Mount Denali to Old Faithful." Critics also claimed that "the proposal would hit minority groups particularly hard."

Interior Department Clarifies, Says It Will Continue To Work On Delta Tunnels Project.

The Los Angeles Times (10/25, Boxall) reports that “after several hours of confusion over the Trump administration’s position on a massive water delivery project, the Interior Department said Wednesday it would continue to work with the state on California WaterFix.” California officials were “scratching their heads over a department statement that the Trump administration does not support the project, which the federal government has helped plan.” Russell Newell, the department’s deputy communications director, told the AP (10/25, Knickmeyer): “The Trump administration did not fund the project and chose to not move forward with it.” According to the article, “it was initially unclear whether Newell was reiterating the reclamation agency’s previous funding position or making a broader statement that the administration was withdrawing any participation in planning and environmental reviews.” In a statement released Wednesday afternoon, Interior said its position had not changed. The department said, “While the Department of the Interior shares the goals of the state of California to deliver water with more certainty, eliminating risks to the California water supply, and improving the environment, at this time, the Department under the current state proposal does not expect to participate in the construction or funding of the CA WaterFix. The Department and Reclamation will continue to work with the state and stakeholders as the project is further developed.”

The San Francisco Chronicle (10/25, Lochhead) reports that Lisa Lien-Mager, a spokeswoman for the tunnel project, said the late-Wednesday statement “confirms what the state and its water project partners already knew; while the federal government does not intend to fund the construction costs of the project they will continue working with the state and stakeholders to facilitate and permit WaterFix.”

Also reporting are the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (10/25, Kasler), the Vallejo \(CA\) Times Herald (10/25, Knickmeyer), the Ventura County \(CA\) Star (10/26, Kasler), and the Central Valley \(CA\) Business Times (10/25).

States Urge Revamp On Sage Grouse Management.

KSL-TV Salt Lake City (10/25, O'Donoghue) reports that “leaders in Western states pressed their case in a congressional hearing Wednesday that management of the greater sage grouse is best carried out without federal interference.” Speakers “testified before the U.S. House Committee on Natural Resources, chaired by Rep. Rob Bishop, R-Utah, during an oversight hearing on ‘state-based management solutions’ to protect and restore the birds’ number.”

Scientists Question Proposed Plans To Manage Sage Grouse. The Idaho Mountain Express (10/25, Moore) reports that “seventeen scientists involved in revisions of federal sage grouse-management plans throughout the West two years ago are warning Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke of potential harm to the species if the BLM follows through on a proposal to change those plans.” In a letter to Zinke, the scientists wrote, “We are concerned that following many of the Reports’ recommendations will lead to an overall loss of sage-grouse habitat quantity and quality which in turn may result in additional population declines. We are concerned that the current focus on amending the [land-use plans] will detract from the critical task of building from those plans to realize enhanced conditions in currently designated priority and general habitats and stabilized or increasing sage-grouse populations.”

Western Voices Are Ignored In Zinke’s Interior Department. In an op-ed for The Hill (10/25, O'Neill), Jayson O'Neill, deputy director of the Western Values Project, warns against “undoing BLM’s sage-grouse plans.” O'Neill writes that “instead of working to appease corporate donors and putting forth solutions that would benefit a few wealthy people, politicians in Washington should instead be working with folks on the ground to implement and build on the success of the 2015 sage-grouse plans.” He says that “Westerners are sick and tired of having Washington meddling in their business.” O'Neill urges Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Rep. Rob Bishop to “support their efforts to make sure the sagebrush landscape works for everyone out West.”

Campaigns Continue To Remind Alaskan Ivory Products Are Legal.

The Alaska Journal of Commerce (10/25, Klouda) reports that “fossilized ivory and walrus ivory carvings created by Alaska Natives are the focus of a renewed public relations campaign to stress to other states that there is no ban on legally obtained Alaska ivory artifacts and art pieces.” The article says that “at the Alaska Federation of Natives convention in Anchorage in a recorded message played Oct. 19, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke used part of his address to reassure delegates.” Zinke said, “On the policy side, we are protecting your right to sell walrus ivory. It is different from banned elephant ivory and it’s important to make that distinction.”

New Attitude, New Hope For Struggling Energy Industry.

The Lafayette \(LA\) Daily Advertiser (10/25, Stickney) reports that Randal Luthi, president of the National Ocean Industries Association, “told a 2017 Louisiana Gulf Coast Oil and Gas Exposition audience Wednesday that the Trump administration has made important appointments and taken decisive, needed steps to reverse the perceived bias in Washington against fossil fuels.” According to Luthi, “Trump appointments like Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Bureau of Safety and Environment Enforcement Director Scott Angelle of Breaux Bridge, who spoke to LAGCOE on Tuesday, are working with the energy industry, not fighting it.” He said, “Personnel is policy.”

Trump Asked About Changing Denali’s Name Back To Mt. McKinley.

The New York Post (10/25, Fredericks) reports that according to a story in Tuesday’s Alaska Dispatch News, President Trump “was so determined to reverse his predecessor’s legacy that he asked Alaska’s two senators,” Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan, “if he should change the name of the US’ largest mountain back to Mt. McKinley from the Native American name it had been called for 10,000 years.” The Obama Administration “had changed the name to Denali – its name in the indigenous Athabascan language – in recognition of Native Americans’ heritage as the original residents of North America.” Sullivan said he and Murkowski “jumped over the desk, we said, ‘No! No! Don’t want to reverse that.’”

Ryan Zinke’s Silly Flag-Flying Ritual Violates Agency Rules.

The Huffington Post (10/25, D’Angelo) reports that “a military tradition” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has “revived at Interior Department headquarters in Washington appears to violate the agency’s policy for displaying and flying flags.” The problem, according to the article, is the flag that is flown for deputy secretary David Bernhardt when Zinke isn’t in office. The article notes that “the Interior Department’s manual — specifically Part 310, Chapter 5 — spells out which flags are allowed to be flown outdoors.” That is, “At the Secretary’s direction, [the secretary’s flag] may be flown over DOI-controlled buildings in which the Secretary is present.” The deputy secretary’s ceremonial flag, however, “is for indoor display only, in the immediate office of the Deputy Secretary, and at official functions and ceremonies at which the Deputy Secretary is the principal speaker.”

Navajo Nation Lawmaker Implores Trump To Protect Monuments.

The AP (10/26) reports that “in a television advertisement airing Thursday, a Navajo Nation lawmaker implores President Donald Trump to protect national monuments.” The 30-second spot “shows Davis Filfred walking in Bears Ears National Monument in southern Utah.” As the ad closes, Filfred says: “Mr. President. Not all monuments divide us. Some bring us together.” Filfred “tells The Associated Press the ad is his way of trying to get attention from officials he says haven’t listened to tribal concerns.”

Enviros Sue DOI For Emails From Oil, Hunting Groups.

Law360 (10/25, Macagnone) reports that “an environmental group has alleged the Interior Department unlawfully held back communications it has had with oil and natural gas lobbying groups, suing the agency Monday to have it release emails and other documents related to its communications with the energy and hunting industries.” The Western Values Project, “which describes itself as advocating balanced energy development on public lands, claims the Interior Department has for months delayed complying with a Freedom of Information Act request for emails.”

U.S. Marine Sanctuary Oil Drilling Report Sent To Trump, Not Public.

Reuters (10/25, Volcovici) reports Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross sent a report to the White House on Wednesday including recommendations on whether to change the boundaries of 11

marine sanctuaries to allow for more oil and gas drilling. Commerce reviewed the sanctuaries, with more than 425 million acres of coral reefs, habitats and beaches, as part of the Administration's move to open more areas to oil and gas drilling. The report was not made public, and oil industry executives say there is little desire for more drilling in the marine sanctuaries because of costs and public opposition.

This Land Is No Longer Your Land.

Bloomberg News (10/25, Reel) reports that while the fight over national monuments is grabbing the most attention, the "disputed trails leading into the Crazy Mountains represent another front in the escalating battle over control of federal territory, and the fighting here is just as contentious as over the monuments."

Release Final Monuments Report Now.

In an op-ed for the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (10/25, Gangloff), Deborah Gangloff, the president and CEO of Crow Canyon Archaeological Center in Cortez, raises concerns about the future of the national monuments as recommended in Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's report to President Trump. Gangloff argues that "opening these areas up to what the administration refers to as 'traditional uses' (i.e., mining, timbering, and grazing) would actually threaten the long-term economic well-being of surrounding communities." From Gangloff's point of view, "not to protect this rich and valuable connection to our shared American history that doubles as an economic engine is not only selfish and short-sighted, but robs people forever of their heritage."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Navajo, Other Tribes Call Land-Use Bill A Step In The Right Direction.

Cronkite News (10/25, Windes) reports that "tribal leaders backed a House bill Wednesday that would give tribes the ability to control more of their land, instead of having to get federal approval for virtually any use." The American Indian Empowerment Act would allow "tribes shift federally controlled trust land to 'restricted fee land,' a move that could save millions of dollars that tribes now spend on 'burdensome regulation,' while restoring a level of tribal sovereignty." The article adds that "while they called the bill a step in the right direction, however, witnesses said they are concerned about ambiguities in the thin, three-page bill that 'could allow state or local governments to implement property taxes on tribal land,' among other issues." However, "with slight changes, witnesses said at a hearing of House Natural Resources subcommittee, the bill would greatly benefit Indian Country."

10th Circ. Wrongly Put Wind Farm Ruling On Hold, Tribe Says.

Law360 (10/25, Lidgett) reports that "the Osage Minerals Council told the Tenth Circuit Tuesday that it shouldn't have stayed the mandate of a panel decision that said wind farm developers should have obtained a mineral lease from the Osage Nation and Bureau of Indian Affairs approval before starting surface construction for an Oklahoma wind farm."

BIA Fatally Shoots Suspect On Standing Rock Reservation.

The AP (10/25) reports that "the FBI says a suspect was shot dead after a confrontation with officers of the Bureau of Indian Affairs on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation." The FBI's Minneapolis Division, "BIA officers assigned to the reservation responded to a call of shots fired at a gas station Monday," and "after a short vehicle chase, BIA officers tried to take the suspect into custody." The article says that "during the incident, the BIA shot and killed the suspect."

Bureau Of Land Management

Pawnee National Grassland Looking At Gas Well Plan.

The Loveland \(CO\) Reporter-Herald (10/25) reports the Pawnee National Grassland "is analyzing the proposed Wildwood Federal No. 1 Oil and Gas Well Project, located approximately 4.5 miles north of Briggsdale." US Forest Service spokeswoman Reghan Cloudman said in a press release that the public can comment on the proposal to build and maintain an oil and gas well and production facility on Pawnee National Grassland. "The Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management are working together to analyze the proposed action," she said.

The Sterling \(CO\) Journal-Advocate (10/25, Rice) reports that Cloudman said, “We’ll be going through the environmental analysis where specialists will look at possible impacts on resources we have out on the grasslands. The BLM is the one to ultimately give permission for the lease to drill.”

Conservation Groups Challenge BLM Approval Of Drilling Plan In North Fork Valley.

The Denver Post (10/25, Svaldi) reports Colorado and national conservation groups “have filed a legal challenge to force the Bureau of Land Management to reconsider an oil and gas development plan approved this month in the North Fork Valley near Paonia.” The complaint “seeks to have the BLM reconsider its approval of the Bull Mountain Unit Master Development Plan sought by Houston-based SG Interests.” According to the Post, the BLM approval, “issued Oct. 4, allows for the construction of 33 well pads, 146 natural gas wells and four wastewater disposal wells across 19,670 acres of mineral estate.”

The Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (10/25) reports that the Bureau of Land Management “received bids on geothermal leases in Nevada that brought in $78,444 in total receipts during an online auction held Oct. 23.” According to the article, “twenty parcels totaling 38,308.46 acres were offered during the lease sale,” and “all parcels sold for $2 an acre.” Marci Todd, Acting BLM Nevada State Director, said, “By providing opportunities for energy development, the BLM is supporting job creation and the economy of local communities.”

Rebuild Planned For Utah’s Historic — And Hellish — Hole-in-the-Rock Road.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (10/25, Maffly) reports that Utah’s Hole in the Rock road is Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument’s most traveled road, but “many visitors aren’t pleased with the famous road’s sorry, channel-like condition that turns the drive from Escalante to Glen Canyon into a three-hour ordeal, on a good day.” Now, Garfield County “has the money to rebuild Garfield’s 16-mile stretch of the road and is seeking the Bureau of Land Management’s permission to proceed.” County officials “say they plan to repair past flood damage, narrow the roadway, shore up culverts and make it easier to maintain and drive on.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Anglers’ NY Wind Farm Challenge Is Premature, Agency Says.

Law360 (10/25, Goldberg) reports that the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management “on Tuesday told a D.C. federal judge that seafood industry groups, companies and several towns can’t seek to block a $42.5 million lease awarded to Statoil Wind for a wind farm off the coast of New York because the company hasn’t even proposed a project yet.”

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Now Leading Offshore Safety Bureau, Angelle Promises To Be Industry ‘Partner’ On Federal Level.

KATC-TV Lafayette, LA (10/25) reports that Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement director Scott Angelle on Tuesday said his agency is “focused on undoing or amending three Obama administration policies.” In a keynote address at an industry event in Lafayette, Angelle “said his mandate within the Trump administration is to eliminate ‘unnecessary regulatory burdens’ that discourage capital investment in the Gulf, while also remaining mindful of safety requirements and environmental safeguards.” Angelle also “told industry professionals gathered at the Cajundome for the Louisiana Gulf Coast Oil Exposition they will enjoy warmer relations with the Trump administration than they did with the previous one.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Fish And Wildlife To Reconsider Kenai Refuge Rules.

The Kenai \(AK\) Peninsula Clarion (10/25, Earl) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is “planning to revise some of the rules on the Kenai National Wildlife Refuge, including some controversial hunting restrictions.” The agency “published a notice of intent in the federal register on Oct. 2 to start a process to reconsider rules finalized on the refuge in May 2016.” The rules, “which took more than a year to finalize after a lengthy public process, include provisions about plane, boat and motorized vehicle access, camping, firearm use and personal-use gathering of edible plants and shed antlers as well as a number of hunting provisions.”

The AP (10/25) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and “five conservation groups have teamed up to offer $15,500 for information about the illegal poaching of a federally protected gray wolf that was shot dead in a national forest in southern Oregon.” The wolf, “known as OR-33, was being tracked by authorities and is one of at least eight that have been poached or died under mysterious circumstances in the state since 2015, the conservation groups said.” The FWS is “offering $5,000 for information about the poaching and the conservation groups are offering an additional $10,500 combined.”

spring after Tribal Council's vote last week to fund the $68,100 needed to complete the regulatory process." Clay Jordan, the park's acting superintendent, said, "We appreciate the commitment that Principal Chief Sneed and the tribe are making to help us complete the required environmental assessment to better understand potential effects associated with traditional gathering. Through the assessment, managers will be able to determine whether traditional gathering can be done without significantly impacting the park sochan population."

US Geological Survey

Study Offers More Evidence Linking Earthquakes To Wastewater Injection Wells.

The AP (10/25, Elliott) reports a study published last week by University of Colorado researchers linked the increase of earthquakes on the Colorado-New Mexico border since 2001 to wastewater injection wells, “similar to human-caused quakes in Oklahoma and other states.” The study “concluded that the wastewater caused a big enough increase in underground pressure to make rock formations slip along fault lines.” According to the US Geological Service, earthquakes in the Raton Basin of northern New Mexico and southern California started to increase in 2001, “about two years after large-scale wastewater injection began.” A 2014 paper by the USGS “blamed injection wells for the area’s quakes,” but the new UC study “went further, using computer models and records of wastewater injection to conclude that enough pressure built up to cause the quakes.”

Trump: Democrats’ Role In Russia Dossier Creation “A Disgrace.”

Coverage of the news that elements of the Democratic Party helped to fund the Fusion GPS dossier on then-candidate Donald Trump focuses mainly on negative aspects for the Democrats. The President’s comments on the news get some attention, but much more is given to how much Hillary Clinton and her campaign knew, and who authorized the payments. Also at issue – particularly in conservative media – is the FBI’s role in the affair.

NBC Nightly News (10/25, story 3, 2:10, Holt) reported that Trump “[tore] into Democrats and former rival Hillary Clinton over reports that the Clinton campaign and the Democratic National Committee helped fund opposition research that wound up in a dossier, containing salacious and unverified allegations about him.” Trump: “They were embarrassed by

it. I think it's a disgrace. It's just really, it's a very sad, it's a very sad commentary on politics in this country."

The AP (10/25, Tucker) reports, "Trump and fellow Republicans latched onto revelations tying" the Clinton campaign to the dossier, and Politico (10/25, Cheney) reports that Republicans "mounted a counterattack this week against the drumbeat from multiple investigations into Moscow's meddling...in a dizzying 24 hours." Trump said on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (10/25), "Don't forget Hillary Clinton totally denied this. She didn't know anything. She knew nothing all of a sudden they found out. What I was amazed at it's almost $6 million that they paid and it's totally discredited. It's a total phony. I call it fake news. It's disgraceful." The New York Post (10/25, Moore) reports that the President also tweeted, "'Clinton campaign & DNC paid for research that led to the anti-Trump Fake News Dossier. The victim here is the President.' @FoxNews".

Politico (10/25, McCaskill) reports that when asked by reporters about which Republican might have initially funded it, Trump said, "If I were to guess, I have one name in mind. It'll probably be revealed. I'd rather not say, but you'll be surprised. You'll be surprised." Breitbart (10/25, Spiering) also runs that quote from the President in a brief item.

The Washington Times (10/25, Boyer) reports that Trump also told reporters that "given the revelations about the dossier and fresh investigations into a uranium deal with a Russian firm approved by the Obama administration, the Russia controversy has 'turned around' on the Democrats." Trump said, "This was the Democrats coming up with an excuse for losing an election. They lost it very badly. They didn't know what to say, so they made up the whole Russia hoax. Now it's turning out that the whole hoax is turned around." However, in Politico Magazine (10/25), Jack Shafer calls that "a valiant stab at magical thinking by Baby Donald, but the dossier is only a slice of the evidentiary pie being thrown at him. As the anti-Trump Republican operative Rick Wilson tweeted, even if the dossier was 'a farrago of utter fantasy,' other US government and foreign intelligence findings point to Trump's Kremlin entanglements."

Rep. Marsha Blackburn (R-TN) tweeted, "Crooked Hillary has been behind Russian collusion allegations all along! Shame on her for wasting officials' time!" Rep. Ken Calvert (R-CA) tweeted, "Hillary Clinton & the DNC lied to Americans about paying for the development of the false Trump dossier." Rep. Pete Olson (R-TX) tweeted, "The corrupt DNC and Clinton camp paid for a fake Russian dossier about our president! Democrats can't be trusted."

Conservative commentators are weighing in. David French of National Review (10/25) writes, "We don't know what role the Russia dossier has played or is playing in the Russia investigation. ... But we did learn a bit more last night, and what we learned undermines the dossier, indicts the Clinton campaign, and helps Donald Trump." Mollie Hemingway of The Federalist (10/25) writes, "Here we have the realization that the Clinton campaign, the DNC, and the FBI all worked wittingly or unwittingly with Russians to affect the results of the 2016 election. ... These efforts perverted our justice system by forcing the attorney general to recuse himself for the crime of having attended meetings with Russian diplomats and spawning a massive, sprawling, limitless probe over Russia." Matt Vespa of Townhall (10/25) writes, "My, oh my – how the tables have turned."

The Hill (10/25, Fabian, Easley) also reports on the President's remarks.

Clinton Camp "Largely Silent"; Current DNC Leadership Says It Was Not Involved. On ABC World News Tonight (10/25, story 3, 2:20, Muir), Brian Ross reported, "Until now, Hillary Clinton and her campaign team would not admit any connection to the Trump dossier," which "was produced for a Washington-based firm called Fusion GPS, which had actually started digging up dirt on Trump for an unknown Republican during the primaries. After several Republican candidates dropped out, the Clinton campaign and the Democrats secretly paid Fusion GPS to continue their research efforts. ... Former Clinton campaign spokesperson Brian Fallon said the Democrats did nothing wrong." Fallon: "I think it's important to remember that opposition research happens all the time in campaigns."

On the CBS Evening News (10/25, story 6, 2:00, Mason), Jeff Pagues reported, "The 35-page dossier details some of the most explosive allegations now under investigation by special counsel Robert Mueller. ... Until now, some top Clinton campaign officials have denied knowing who was behind the effort to dig up dirt." Fallon: "I'm sure that there's a small group of folks that were aware of the nature of the decision to hire Fusion back in the spring of 2016. But it was kept for reasons that I understand to a very select group, given the sensitive nature of who they hired."

The Washington Post (10/25, Hamburger, Helderman) reports that "Clinton and top officials of her presidential campaign were largely silent" on Wednesday "in response to the revelation that the campaign and the Democratic National Committee had paid for research that resulted" in the dossier. Fallon "said he didn't know about the research at the time but called it 'money well spent' if it provided information useful to the special counsel now investigating Russia's involvement." The Daily Mail (10/25, Earle) reports that Fallon told CNN that Clinton "'may have' known about her campaign's funding of the infamous dossier." He told CNN, "I haven't spoken to her, no. ... She may have known. The degree of exactly what she knew is beyond my knowledge."

Becket Adams of the Washington Examiner (10/25) writes that either Clinton "knew nothing about her campaign's role in financing the dossier" and "is guilty of nothing worse than ignorance" but was deceived by her staff, or that she "has known about the dossier this entire time, and she has been misrepresenting what she knows. Any way you cut it, it doesn't reflect well on Clinton or her team."

The Hill (10/25, Easley) reports that Democratic National Committee representatives said that Chairman Tom Perez, "who only became the Democratic leader in April, had nothing to do with the arrangement," and Rep. Keith Ellison (D-MN), the DNC's deputy chairman, "emphasized that both he and Perez came to the DNC long after the contract with Fusion GPS had ended." Ellison said, "Tom and me, we weren't even there at the time. I know as much about it as you guys who have reported it." A spokesman for Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz (D-FL), who was DNC chair at the time, said, "She was not aware of anything related to this research arrangement." The Daily Caller (10/25, Hasson) reports that the DNC "released a carefully-worded statement meant to distance current party leader from the dossier." The Wall Street Journal (10/25) editorializes that it appears that the Democrats paid for Russian operatives to compile the dossier, which is a form of collusion in itself.

Rep. Elijah Cummings (D-MD), ranking member on the House Oversight Committee, said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (10/25), "All of this, to me, is unfortunately a distraction from the things that we need to be doing. ... But I think the American people need to understand the whole role that Russia is now playing in our elections and will continue to play and they need to keep in mind that the highest ranking law enforcement person in the country has said basically – and that is Attorney General Sessions – that there is no investigation from his office's standpoint."

The Washington Times (10/25, Boyer) reports that the Campaign Legal Center has filed a complaint with the Federal Election Commission alleging that Clinton's campaign and the DNC violated campaign finance law by failing to disclose payments for the dossier.

FBI's Role Now Under Scrutiny. Byron York of the Washington Examiner (10/25) writes, "Knowing that the Clinton campaign [and] the DNC...supported the dossier is not the end of the story. The most important next step is the FBI." According to the Washington Post, dossier compiler Christopher Steele "'reached an agreement with the FBI a few weeks before the election for the bureau to pay him to continue his work.' It was an astonishing turn: the nation's top federal law enforcement agency agreeing to fund an ongoing opposition research project being conducted by one of the candidates in the midst of a presidential election."

House Intelligence Chairman Devin Nunes said on Fox News' Tucker Carlson Tonight (10/25), "I think the next focus is going to be on whether or not did the FBI use this dossier to get any warrants, did they use it to open a counter intelligence investigation. And if they did, if they're using unverified information to open up inquiries into American citizens, I think we have a big problem." David Harsanyi of The Federalist (10/25) asks, "How often did the FBI use the dossier as a pretext for FISA warrants? Seems like a reasonable question."

Newsday \(NY\) (10/25, Goldschlag) reports that though "the question of who paid for the 'Russia dossier' on Trump is now partly answered, still open is the question of who might pay, in the form of legal jeopardy, if some of its more explosive but unverified contents are found credible" by Mueller.

Max Boot of the Council on Foreign Relations tweeted, "And before that it was paid for by anti-Trump GOp. So what? Doesn't affect whether it's true. And it's not reason for Mueller probe." ABC political analyst Matthew Dowd tweeted, "Mueller's investigation has little to do with dossier. Much bigger issues." Washington Post conservative blogger Jennifer Rubin tweeted that the news is "a nothing burger just to give Fox something to cover all day."

Judge Gives Fusion GPS Until Thursday To Answer Congressional Subpoena. Reuters (10/25, Hosenball) reports that US District Court Judge Tanya Chutkan has given Fusion GPS "until Thursday to reach an agreement with Congress over a subpoena for the firm's bank records." The House Intelligence Committee has "subpoenaed an unidentified bank for the last two years of records of the accounts of Fusion GPS."

Trump: Uranium One Deal Is Modern-Day "Watergate." The Hill (10/25, Beavers) reports

Senate Judiciary Chairman Charles Grassley tweeted that he is seeking the appointment of a special counsel “to investigate the Uranium One deal that gave a Russian-owned company partial control of US atomic energy resources in 2010” – a deal that the President compared to Watergate on Wednesday. The Washington Times (10/25, Boyer) reports that Trump told reporters, “I think the uranium sale to Russia and the way it was done so underhanded, with tremendous amounts of money being passed, I actually think that’s ‘Watergate,’ modern age.”

USA Today (10/25, Johnson) reports that the DOJ has “lifted a gag order on an FBI informant to provide testimony to Congress” about the Uranium One deal. The Hill (10/25, Solomon) reports, “Multiple congressional committees have been seeking to interview the informant, whose name has not been released publicly.”

Assange Says He Rejected Help Offer From Cambridge Analytica. The New York Times (10/25, Confessore) reports that WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange said on Wednesday “that he had rebuffed a request for help last year” from the head of Cambridge Analytica, a data firm that worked for Trump. Assange “did not disclose what kind of help [was] sought, only that he had declined the request.” Assange tweeted, “I can confirm an approach by Cambridge Analytica [prior to November last year] and can confirm that it was rejected by WikiLeaks.”

The Hill (10/25, Chalfant) reports that the Trump campaign “appeared to distance itself” from Cambridge Analytica on Wednesday after it was reported that CEO Alexander Nix sought contact with Assange over Clinton’s emails. The Daily Beast (10/25) reports that Assange told Nix “that he didn’t want his help, and preferred to do the work on his own.” In related news, Politico (10/25, Gerstein) reports that the Trump campaign argued in a court filing that WikiLeaks’ publication of hacked DNC emails “was legal and specifically protected by federal law.”

Rove: Impeachment Push Could Hurt Democrats. Karl Rove writes in his Wall Street Journal (10/25) column that billionaire Tom Steyer’s injection of $10 million into a push to impeach the President moves the matter beyond the back benches of the House, but could ultimately hurt the Democratic Party by resulting in a focus on Trump rather than on an electoral strategy.

Trump Attends Harvey Recovery Briefing Before Dallas GOP Fundraising Event.

Coverage of President Trump’s visit to Texas for a briefing on hurricane recovery efforts and a Republican fundraiser is negative, with reports saying that the briefing was added to justify the cost of a political trip, and that Trump praised his own efforts at the briefing. The Corpus Christi \(TX\) Caller-Times (10/25, Moritz) reports that the President “arrived in Dallas on Wednesday to a cheering welcome, and later by sign-carrying protesters assailing his truthfulness, where he met with Texas Gov. Greg Abbott for an update on the Hurricane Harvey recovery effort as a prelude to an afternoon of politicking.” During remarks at the briefing, Trump “said he looked forward to seeing plans to address flooding in Houston ‘on a more permanent basis.’”

The Washington Post (10/25, Phillips) reports that Trump also “praise[d]...himself and his government...then suggested that Houston recovery officials take a look at a special kind of sheet rock that could prevent another Harvey.” Trump said, “They use it in bathtubs and showers, and water has no impact on it.” The Hill (10/25, Greenwood) reports that Trump said that it “is the same material used around bathtubs and other areas exposed to moisture. Greenboard is a water-resistant drywall.”

The Dallas Morning News (10/25, Gillman) reports that though “adoring fans cheered him at Love Field and 200 well-heeled donors rubbed elbows with him downtown,” if Trump “was hoping for a respite from the venomous atmosphere in Washington, his day trip to Dallas offered little. Catcalls from hundreds of protesters filtered into the swank fund-raiser. ‘Go home Cheeto!’ they yelled, holding signs that read ‘Liar liar’ and ‘shame.’”

The Los Angeles Times (10/25, Bennett) reports that Trump was in Dallas “for a Republican fundraiser and political reception,” and had “added a brief meeting about hurricane recovery efforts continuing on the Gulf Coast about 250 miles away.” Newsweek (10/25) reports that the briefing was added in “an apparent effort to have the political visit subsidized by taxpayer dollars.” The event “cost attendees $2,700 a ticket and an extra $35,000 to take a photo with Trump.” The AP (10/25) reports that the event was “expected to raise $4 million.”

Politico’s Alex Isenstadt tweeted, “Trump raised $4.5 mil for 2020 reelection tonight in Dallas. Big donors present included Andy Beale, Harold Hamm, Tom Hicks Sr.” Mark Knoller of CBS News tweeted that “tickets range[d] from $2700 to $100,000 per person.” The Washington Times (10/25, Boyer) and the WFAA-TV Dallas (10/25) website also have brief reports.

Trump: Tax Cuts Will Create “So Many Jobs.”

Asked about tax reform on Fox Business’ Lou Dobbs Tonight ☐ (10/25), President Trump said, “I think we're going to get [tax cuts]. I think the senators are going to come together. I think the House is looking really good." Trump also said that "we're bringing the corporate rate down to 20 percent from 35 percent. This will be the biggest tax cut in history in the history of our country and that's great and we need it because right now our country is about the highest taxed or certainly one of the highest taxed in the world and we can't have that." Trump added, "We are going to have so many jobs created by what we're doing and you know we're going to have companies that aren't leaving our country any more."

Senate Panel Approves EPA Nominees Over Democrats' Objections.

Reuters (10/25) reports the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee yesterday "approved four nominees to key posts at the Environmental Protection Agency, including one appointee with ties to the chemical industry who will head the agency's office of chemical safety." Sen. Tom Carper "said two of the nominees were of 'grave concern': Bill Wehrum, nominated for assistant administrator for the Office of Air and Radiation, and Michael Dourson to head up the Office of Chemical Safety and Pollution Prevention." Carper "called Dourson 'one of the most troubling nominees I have ever considered during my time on this committee.'" The Cleveland Plain Dealer (10/25, Eaton) indicates "the 11-10 vote to advance Dourson's nomination was approved along party lines." Likewise, says Automotive News (10/25, Kulisch), "all 10 Democrats opposed Wehrum's nomination because of concern that he is too close to industry and taking a lax approach to regulating emissions while at EPA under the Bush administration."

The Washington Examiner (10/25, Siegel) notes the committee also "advanced the nominations of Matthew Leopold, President Trump's nominee to be assistant administrator for the Office of General Counsel; and David Ross, chosen to be assistant administrator for the Office of Water." After the votes, "Democrats gave lengthy speeches denouncing Dourson and Wehrum." Sen. Ed Markey "called the committee's approval of Dourson and Wehrum 'one of the low points of my entire career,'" and Sen. Tammy Duckworth "called Dourson the 'absolute worst person I can think of to be in charge of chemical safety in this country.'"

The Intercept (10/25, Lerner) reports "powerless Democrats watched in anger as their Republican colleagues...voted along party lines to advance" Dourson's nomination, and USA Today (10/25, Shesgreen) that Dourson "has sparked intense opposition from Senate Democrats and environmental groups, who have blasted him for engaging in 'fake pseudo-science,' referring to his research funded in part by the chemical industry." Dourson's "findings have generally endorsed high levels of chemicals and pesticides in drinking water and other consumer products." The AP (10/25, Smith) notes that it "reported last month that Dourson, a toxicologist, has for years accepted payments from chemical companies to write papers pushing back against peer-reviewed studies raising health concerns about his clients' products." The AP adds that "past corporate clients include Dow Chemical Co., Koch Industries Inc. and Chevron Corp."

On the other hand, the AP (10/25, Biesecker) reports, "committee Chairman John Barrasso called Trump's nominees well-qualified and experienced." The Washington Examiner (10/25, Siegel) notes that EPA Administrator Pruitt "commended Republicans for advancing the nominations," saying, "These top leaders in their fields will bring positive change to EPA's mission to protect human health and the environment. We look forward to a full Senate vote on these highly-qualified leaders." The Washington Times (10/25, Wolfgang), among other news outlets, runs a similar report this morning.

WSJournal Analysis: Trump Team Seeks To Foster Economic Growth By Removing Regulations.

The Wall Street Journal (10/25, Ip) reports the Trump Administration is trying to spur economic growth by removing regulations that stop innovation.

EPA Prepares To Place Two-Year Delay On Methane Regulations.

The Daily Caller (10/25, White) reports that the EPA is expected to place a two-year delay on Obama-era regulations on methane emissions from oil and gas operations as a means to "buy time for a plan replacing the rule." The oil and gas industry claims the rule is "unnecessary and duplicative of already existing laws," and critics claimed that the rule "was a regulation in search of a problem, pointing to research showing that methane emissions from oil and gas drilling have plummeted, despite a huge increase drilling operations."

Clean Power Plan Repeal Includes Plan To Alter Social Cost Of Carbon.

E&E Publishing (10/25) reports that the Trump administration's plans to repeal the Clean Power

Plan also includes a proposal to dramatically alter the social cost of carbon used under the Obama administration, which was placed at about $42 per ton by 2020. The new EPA document “significantly lowers that estimate, placing it between $1 and $6 per ton.” The current proposal also “considers only the domestic social cost of carbon, rather than its cost at a global scale.” The controversial shift requires a deep consideration of “our values as a society,” warned Frances Moore, a professor at the University of California, Davis.

EPA To Review Whether Clean Air, Water Laws Affect Energy Sector Jobs Losses.

Reuters (10/25, Volcovici) reports that the EPA said Wednesday it will examine how “bedrock laws like the Clean Air Act and Clean Water Act affect energy industry job losses” as part of President Trump’s executive order to “reduce unnecessary regulatory burdens” on businesses. EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt, Energy Secretary Rick Perry and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke have all outlined separate lists of measures for review under the order.

The Hill (10/25, Henry) reports that one of the EPA’s new initiatives will create a task force to review the permitting process for new sources of air pollution under the Clean Air Act, called the New Source Review (NSR.) The EPA argued in a 15-page report on its regulations, “In some circumstances, the NSR process discourages the construction of new facilities or modifications of existing ones that could result in greater environmental improvements.”

DOE Releases Report Highlighting Programs For Repeal, Reform. E&E Publishing (10/25) reports the Energy Department yesterday “released its long-awaited report” on “policies that are ripe for repeal or reform because they hinder energy production.” Energy Secretary Perry in the report “calls for reviewing National Environmental Policy Act guidelines, streamlining liquefied natural gas exports and reassessing national laboratory policies.” The document “is the first sign of the agency’s response to a high-profile executive order the White House issued earlier this year to scrap red tape and promote ‘energy independence.’”

The Daily Caller (10/25, Bastasch) reports in a statement on the release of the report, Perry said, “Through our ongoing efforts, we will promote job creation and economic growth, unleash American energy dominance, and advance the energy security of our international trading partners.”

EPA Chief Says He’s No Ally To Polluters.

Bloomberg News (10/25, Dlouhy, Jacobs) reports that EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt dismissed critics who say he has been too cozy with the industries he is in charge of regulation, and vowed to “do enforcement, to go after bad actors and go after polluters.” The watchdog group Environmental Integrity Project reported in August that in the first six months of the Trump administration, “civil penalties paid for environmental violations were 60 percent smaller on average than for comparable periods” in the past three administrations.

Author Likens Climate Change Debate To Acid Rain Scare Of 1970s-80s.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/25, Darwall), Rupert Darwall, author of “Green Tyranny: Exposing the Totalitarian Roots of the Climate Industrial Complex,” likens the current debate over climate change to the acid-rain scare of the 1970s and 80s, citing the acid-rain alarm, which was proved to be based on faulty science as evidence that the scientific consensus is not a guarantee that the consensus is correct.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“The Real Reason For Republicans’ Silence On Donald Trump.” In an editorial, the New York Times (10/25) says, “It’s less striking that a few Republican congressmen have publicly denounced” President Trump’s “conduct than that most of their colleagues have not. Their fellow legislators have silently accepted his outrages in exchange for policies they’ve always wanted,” such as “transferring power to Wall Street, fossil fuel companies, the chemical industry and other special interests,” while “stoking an anti-populist bonfire to incinerate protections for consumers and workers.”

“The Last Thing Australia And Our Planet Need.” The New York Times (10/25, Board) editorializes that “while global demand for coal is falling as the nations of the world have committed themselves to slashing carbon emissions,” Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull “wants to help a powerful Indian conglomerate build an enormous system of coal mines in a remote stretch of Queensland.” The Times argues that “burning the estimated 66 million tons of coal a year that the Adani Group aims to produce” from the mine “can only make it harder for the world to meet its aspirations under the Paris climate agreement.”

“Scrapping MetroCards Isn’t Vital, But Any Subway Fix Will Do.” A New York Times (10/25) editorial.

Washington Post.

“Finally, A Healthcare Proposal That Actually Pays Off.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/25) argues that in light of a CBO study which found that the Alexander-Murray healthcare bill would reduce federal budget deficits and not impact the number of people without coverage, the measure “now officially falls into the category of ‘so obvious it should pass immediately.’”

“The Catalan Crisis Is All Thanks To Two Inflexible Leaders.” A Washington Post (10/25) editorial says Spain is facing “its worst political crisis since its return to democracy 40 years ago, thanks to the inflexibility of two key leaders” – Catalan President Carles Puigdemont and Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy. The Post says Puigdemont and his followers “badly overestimated their ability to mobilize support for their separatist cause,” while Rajoy’s “hard-line actions risk driving more voters into the separatist camp. He should refrain from more repression and push for a political solution.”

“Trump Crosses Another Line.” The Washington Post (10/25) editorializes that President Trump’s “disdain for the integrity of the Justice Department may no longer surprise a weary public,” but “it is nevertheless shocking to learn that Mr. Trump has breached tradition to personally interview two candidates for U.S. attorney – both of whom would have the power to investigate him in the future.” Politico and CNN reported that Trump “met with Geoffrey Berman and Ed McNally, whom the administration is considering for the roles of U.S. attorney for the Southern District of New York and the Eastern District of New York, respectively.” The Post argues that “any presidential interview of a U.S. attorney candidate would cross the line,” but “it is particularly concerning that Mr. Trump chose to speak with the men and women who could lead investigations into his business in New York.” The Post concludes that “this threat to the impartial administration of justice cannot go unchallenged.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Democrats, Russians, And The FBI.” The Wall Street Journal (10/25) editorializes that it appears that the Democrats paid for Russian operatives to compile the dossier on then-candidate Trump, which is a form of collusion in itself.

“McConnell 1, Cordray 0.” A Wall Street Journal (10/25) editorial calls Tuesday’s Senate vote to overturn the CFPB’s arbitration rule a victory for the economy and the leadership of Senate Majority Leader McConnell.

“Jeff Flake’s Public Service.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/25, Board) says that Sen. Jeff Flake’s decision not to seek reelection improves the GOP’s odds of retaining his seat in 2018. The Journal adds that Flake was correct in charging that a great deal of Trump’s rhetoric lacks dignity and is untrue.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Of course, there's a reason why Jeff Flake and Bob Corker are able to criticize the President so openly, because neither one of them is trying to get re-elected. Like when you and your girlfriend break up, on the way out the door she tells me, 'None of my orgasms were real!'"

Stephen Colbert: "A reporter overheard a member of Trump's Secret Service saying that Trump ate rice and two pieces of cherry pie, took a few sips of his drink, and that, quote, 'He loves rice.' Well, of course he loves rice. It's the same reason he loves Mike Pence – bland and white."

James Corden: "Trump said his meeting with senators was a love fest, to which Mike Pence said, 'That is a sin. Repent.'"

James Corden: "Two slices of cherry pie and rice. Trump managed to show how to eat like a spoiled toddler and a death-row inmate at the same time."

Trevor Noah: "A senator trolling the President of the United States is not normal. It's funny, but it's not normal. It's like Trump is dragging the entire federal government into trash social media."

You know, you realize there going to be emojis in history books now. Like in three years, there won't even be a Capitol Building. Senators will just vote on Instagram stories."

Trevor Noah: "You see, [Steve] Bannon wants all Republicans who go against Trump to quit, so that he can replace them with Trump loyalists. That is really what he wants. Bannon even said he plans to challenge every single Republican politician except Ted Cruz, which is so sad for Ted Cruz. He even gets left out of threats."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump was tweeting again today. He said that his big meeting with Republican senators was a love fest with multiple standing ovations. Yep, they were mostly people getting up to leave, but still, that counts as standing ovation."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump sent three tweets about how the senators gave him a standing ovation. It's a big deal for Trump. He hasn't seen 50 people cheering him on since his inauguration."

Seth Meyers: "Housing Secretary Ben Carson said today that rebuilding Puerto Rico after Hurricane Maria could take anywhere between one and 100 years. And that's just the kind of precision you expect from a brain surgeon."

Seth Meyers: "A new poll has found that 51 percent of Democrats now have a favorable view of former President George W. Bush, and that makes sense. I'd also have a favorable view of the flu if I suddenly found myself with the plague."

Seth Meyers: "Trump is an old billionaire with a young, beautiful wife who just became President. Why would he ever think, 'I've got to change my ways?' That would be like Larry King going, 'You know what, I'm going to start wearing belts.'"

Conan O'Brien: "Joe Biden made an announcement today. When asked about the 2020 election, Joe Biden said, 'I haven't decided to run, but I've decided I'm not going to decide not to run.'"

Conan O'Brien: "In a late-night vote yesterday, the Senate made it illegal to sue a bank, which is why today Harvey Weinstein petitioned to become a bank."

Conan O'Brien: "In the past week, several prominent men have been fired for sexual harassment. It's called the Harvey effect. Of course, none of them will see any jail time. That's being called the Cosby effect."
