Our National Monuments Threatened

The administration is considering shrinking the boundaries of our new national monuments starting with Bears Ears.

We need your help.

Dear Friends and Partners:

We want to inform you of actions that are underway that could be the first real threat to our national monuments.

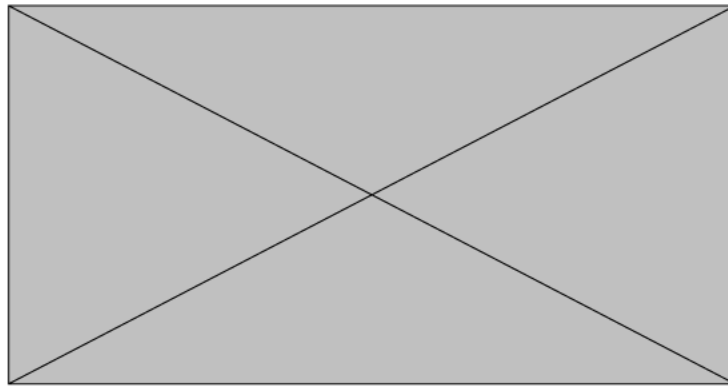

During his confirmation hearings, Congressman Ryan Zinke, (R-MT) stated that if confirmed, he would meet with tribes and stakeholders in Utah and other states with new national monuments. We are now hearing that there are plans in place to administratively shrink the boundaries of Bears Ears National Monument and do away with the Bears Ears Commission which would give indigenous people a real seat at the table. Rep. Zinke has stated that he wants to "deal with the situation in Utah."

We all know that the only situation is the one being created by the Utah delegation and the administration to disregard tribal sovereignty, ignore the popularity of the monument and push to ultimately sell off these important lands to the highest bidder.

We can stop them from destroying the Bears Ears National Monument and #StandWithTribes #StandWithBearsEars

Our community must come together, not only to protect Bears Ears, but to protect all the places we love. An attack on one monument is an attack on all of the National Conservation Lands.

Please help us with our defensive efforts to protect the boundaries of Bears Ears National Monument and the lands that are so sacred to so many of our tribal partners. To do this, we've developed the following social media templates. Please make them your own and share widely.

We know this is just the first of many fights to come and we appreciate your assistance with this effort.

Best,

The CLF Staff

Please #StandWithBearsEars
