In my conversation with the purse seine rep yesterday, he said he did not believe the long-liners were interested in that area, but he qualified that with the fact that he only represented the purse seiners. (Something else I will check with NOAA.) I got a follow-up email from him today; he spoke last night to the head of the tuna association, who owns 3 long-liners, and that gentleman referenced only an interest in the Remote Islands. Here is the draft memo, with the map and the 2 figures showing whale/dolphin congregations scanned as a second attachment. As requested, I have reformatted it to conform to the Bears Ears outline.

Let me know what NOAA says on commercial fishing in the other monuments.

Hit "send" too soon - commercial fishing overall is another question for the NOAA call, but the tuna lobbyist I spoke to yesterday afternoon confirmed that purse seining is banned in the American Samoa sanctuary, which completely overlays the Rose Atoll monument.

Just checking in on the draft memo.
Also, did you have any info re: whether commercial fishing is allowed in marine sanctuaries?
