I can see the annotations this way, and in some cases can go to the individual annotated comment; in the others seems the coder didn't do it right. Net result - 42 new supportive comments from 2 comments that say "this includes 20 (and 22) postcards, but most of the text is garbled.

I still have permission issues to be able to see all your data - am working on that.

You should be able to see the annotations by clicking on a dataset, and use the "Dataset Annotation Report" option. Let me know if this works for you.

Do you know how I review annotations? Despite my request that the coders count multiple comments on one entry and send me an email, most reported using annotations to record that. However, I don't see any obvious way to review those.

Dataset Management (Current Project: Bears Ears)

Datasets are all or part of an archive prepared for human coding. You can easily convert human-coded items into training data. Training data makes it possible to machine-classify current and future datasets.

You currently have no datasets
