Thank you for checking. The group that sent the Obama postcards is not a Tribe, but an organization that says it represents Tribal interests.

Look at the link below. It seems someone, probably with a lot of time on their hands, has been mining our comments and doing some analysis. Both of the withdrawn comments today contained language from this selection:

The following link has a passionate video from Robert Redford. It comes from that same Tribe that sent in all the Obama postcards:

Over the weekend the Help Desk received two more tickets requesting for comments submitted by another entity to be withdrawn:

Hello, someone named Susan Schwarz apparently used my e-mail to submit this comment to Secretary Ryan Zinke about national monuments.

Tracking Number: 1k1-8x9c-2cxs. Document ID: DOI-2017-0002-413673.

This was not me. I don't know who this is. I'm going to guess she used my email address on accident. DOI-2018-10 03366

Dear Secretary Ryan Zinke,
Our public lands are vital to our national legacy. They're economically beneficial to our local communities, and to our nation as a whole. Your policies are a criminal act...see you in court!

Dear Secretary Ryan Zinke, Our public lands are vital to our national legacy, which belongs not only to us, but also to all future Americans. These are the wild places we lovewhere we run, hike, camp, ski, fish, climb and spend important time with our friends and families.

On April 26, President Trump signed an executive order to review the designation of 27 national monuments, including Bears Ears. He says he listened to those members of Congress who want to review the existing monuments' designations. He heard them, so let him hear you. Until July 9, you have the chance to comment directly on the issue. Speak up. Your words matter.

Dear Secretary Ryan Zinke,
Protected public lands are a part of our national heritage—an attack on this monument, or any monument for that matter, is an attack on America.
