Media of Interest

Secretary Zinke To Tour Montana Mine With Vice President Pence.

The Hill (5/11, Cama, Henry) reports that Vice President Mike Pence will “campaign for Montana congressional candidate Greg Gianforte on Friday, on a trip that will also see him venture into one of the state’s coal mines.” Pence will “meet with business leaders and officials from the Crow Nation Tribe while in the state, and he will also tour Westmoreland Coal Company’s mine with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke.” Montana Public Radio (5/11, Yamanaka) reports that following the mine tour, Pence and Zinke are “scheduled to meet with industry and Crow tribal representatives for a business roundtable.”

Washington Attorney General Pledges To Defend National Monuments.

The Seattle Times (5/11, O'Sullivan) reports that “in hopes of protecting Washington’s national monuments, Attorney General Bob Ferguson invited President Donald Trump and U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to visit the state.” However, “if the federal government attempts to roll back those federally protected lands, Ferguson said, he’ll sue the administration once again.” In a letter Thursday to Zinke, Ferguson “argued that the Antiquities Act is ‘the cornerstone of American conservation’ and that Trump and Zinke don’t have the legal authority to roll back a national-monument designation.”

Environmentalists Divided On Republican Efforts To Overhaul Endangered Species Act.

The Morning Consult (5/11, Fitzpatrick) reports that “Democrats and environmentalists are divided over whether it’s worth working with Republicans on changes to the Endangered Species Act, a law supporters say is underfunded and critics say is ineffective and bureaucratic.” Some supporters of the law say see efforts to revise the law as “just an excuse to undercut federal enforcement of the law, which underwent changes in 1988 when it was renewed.” However, “others are open to modest reforms, as long as the Fish and Wildlife Service is given proper funding.”

BLM To Offer Oil, Gas Leases In Colorado.

The Glenwood Springs (CO) Post Independent (5/11, Zorn) reports that the Bureau of Land Management “seeks public comment on a proposal to offer 28 parcels or 27,280 acres of federal minerals, nearly 5,000 acres of which is in Garfield County, in a competitive oil and gas lease sale at the end of the year.” BLM Grand Junction Field Manager Katie Stevens said in the press release, “The most effective comments will address issues and concerns specific to these parcels being considered.”
