Trump To Sign Executive Orders Reassessing Offshore Drilling, Monument Designations.

ABC News (4/24) reports that President Trump is planning a series of executive orders during the week of his 100th day in office. He plans to direct the Interior Department to review prior national monument designations under a more than 100-year-old law that authorizes the president to establish federal lands as national monuments. On Friday, Trump is expected to sign a directive called the America First Energy Executive Order that will call for a review of offshore oil and gas locations and rules.

Interior Makes Selections To Agency Task Force On Cutting Regulations.

E&E Publishing (4/24) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “selected Daniel Jorjani, an adviser to various Koch brothers organizations, and veteran government official James Cason to lead a task force for cutting regulations.” According to an Interior spokeswoman, “Jorjani, a conservative attorney and holdover from the Trump landing team at Interior, will serve as the policy officer, while Cason, current associate deputy secretary, will take the reform officer post.” The selections “to lead a task force for cutting regulations” were part of “President Trump’s February executive order on regulations, which requires agencies to set up deregulatory bodies with members who include a designated policy officer and separate regulatory reform officer.” Monday was “the deadline for federal agencies to form their respective task forces.”

Trump Administration Officials Discuss Goals, Ideas With Outdoor Recreation Industry.

RVBusiness (4/24) reports that senior officials from the Interior Department and U.S. Forest Service “met with more than 30 representatives of the outdoor recreation industry at Virginia’s Shenandoah National Park on April 24 to discuss improving visitor experiences on America’s public lands and waters.” Interior Department Senior Advisor and White House Liaison Doug Domenech “outlined key goals and challenges, and emphasized the need to expand access on public lands and waters,” saying, “the Roosevelt Arch says, ‘For the benefit and enjoyment of the people,’ and bringing people back to the equation is clearly an important issue.” According to the article, “meeting participants identified access as a crucial area where the private sector can help federal partners improve visitor experiences in the great outdoors.”

Fifteen Indicted In Eagle Trafficking Case.

The AP (4/24, Nord) reports that “federal officials in South Dakota said Monday that 15 people have been indicted for illegally trafficking eagles and other migratory birds after a two-year undercover operation potentially involving hundreds of birds.” U.S. Attorney Randy Seiler “said that officials expect ‘significant’ additional federal charges in the case, which focused on trafficking of eagles and eagle parts and feathers for profit.” According to authorities, “the case involves more than 100 eagles, a number that could climb as high as 250.”

Two Men Found Guilty In Bundy Standoff Trial.

The AP (4/24, Ritter) reports that on Monday, a federal jury in Las Vegas “found two men guilty...in an armed standoff that stopped government agents from rounding up cattle near Cliven Bundy’s Nevada ranch in 2014, but then deadlocked on federal charges against four others.” Gregory Burleson of Phoenix was convicted of “eight charges, including threatening and assaulting a federal officer.” Burleson faces “a minimum of 57 years in prison.” Todd

Engel of Idaho “was found guilty of obstruction and traveling across state lines in aid of extortion.” Engel faces a maximum of 30 years in prison. The Washington Times (4/24, Richardson) reports that Burleson “was described as an ex-FBI informant and shown in a video saying he posed as a member of a bogus film crew during the standoff.”

Burnett Oil Survives Legal Challenge To Test For Oil In Big Cypress National Preserve.

The South Florida Sun Sentinel (4/24, Fleshler) reports Burnett Oil Co. won a court fight on Monday over its plans to look for oil in the Big Cypress National Preserve. The company intends to use seismic testing to look for oil under the preserve, but the plan had been challenged by a coalition of six environmental groups. Senior US District Judge John E. Steele ruled in favor of the company because he said that an extensive federal environmental review was sufficient to establish that the work would be minimal, temporary and localized. He also said that the company’s permits included dozens of actions and conditions to avoid harm to wildlife, water and vegetation.

Inquiries

- AP and Bloomberg - REQUEST – Comment on news that POTUS will sign an EO on Antiquities Act? – RESPONSE – tbd
- EE News REQUEST – President Trump's new cybersecurity advisor, Rob Joyce, spoke to the challenges of ensuring strong cybersecurity practices across the U.S. government in a speech this morning. "How do we ensure the Bureau of Reclamation has the same focus on cybersecurity in their critical infrastructure that the Department of Defense does in their weapons systems? That's a real challenge," he said. Joyce mentioned his goal wasn't to "pick on the Bureau of Reclamation," but seeing as he mentioned the department, and owing to last year's IG findings that "high-impact" flaws existed on some computer systems at the Bureau, I wanted to reach out to see how the office is ensuring the cybersecurity of the critical infrastructure networks it controls. Do you have any comment on Joyce's comparison of Bureau of Reclamation and DoD cyber defenses? Has the Bureau pursued any additional cybersecurity investments or actions since President Trump took office? – RESPONSE – Bureau of Reclamation responded “Interior takes protecting our assets and systems very seriously and we are working to continually improve our cybersecurity posture. The Bureau of Reclamation is actively engaged in these activities with the Department.”
