Trump's Bid To Open U.S. Monuments To Development Draws Calls For Protection.

Reuters (5/26, Volcovici) reports President Trump's call to open US national monuments to economic development has garnered over 107,000 comments, "a high number given the short time frame." The article focuses on Utah's Bears Ears monument, the first monument due for a decision on June 10, which has "many industry groups and politicians," including the state's governor, calling for the federal government to "turn over control of the protected lands to states." However, "conservation groups said support of national monuments is wider than the online comments suggest."

Interior Plans To Offer Buyouts, Early Retirements.

Government Executive (5/25, Katz) reports that the Interior Department will “rely on financial incentives to meet workforce reduction goals, according to the Trump administration’s budget documents.” Interior, “like all agencies, is currently drafting initial plans to restructure itself and reduce the size of its workforce.” According to the article, “the department is planning to eliminate more than 6 percent of its employees in fiscal 2018, totaling more than 4,000 workers.” At the direction of the White House Office of Management and Budget, “agencies are moving forward under the assumption that the prescribed budget cuts will prevail, although Congress will have final say over funding levels.”

‘400 Years Is Long Enough’: Virginia’s ‘First Contact’ Indian Tribes Demand Federal Recognition.

The Washington Post (5/26, Miller) reports that “last week, the House voted in favor of the Thomasina E. Jordan Indian Tribes of Virginia Federal Recognition Act of 2017, which would formally acknowledge the Chickahominy, Eastern Chickahominy, Upper Mattaponi, Rappahannock, Monacan, and Nansemond tribes.” However, “the legislation still needs approval from the Senate, which has twice blocked recognition in the past.” Sen. Tim Kaine “said he planned on spending the next month drumming up support to right what he called an ‘injustice.’”

Last-Minute Creation Of BLM Foundation Is Concerning.

The Scottsbluff (NE) Star-Herald (5/28) reports that “the American Sheep Industry Association joined with the Public Lands Council, the National Cattlemen’s Beef Association and nearly two dozen state affiliate livestock associations in voicing concern about the creation of a new Bureau of Land Management Foundation, which was included in the FY 2017 Interior Appropriations bill.” According to the article, “in a letter dated May 9, the groups called for interior appropriations subcommittees in both the House and the Senate to ‘rethink this language while drafting language for the FY 2018 appropriations bill.’” The groups are “concerned with the fact that the language creating the BLM Foundation did not appear in previous drafts of the bill and was never debated on the floor by members of Congress.”

Settle Sage-Grouse Issues Out Of Court, Governor Says.

The Grand Junction (CO) Daily Sentinel (5/30, Webb) reports that “while several northwest Colorado counties have sued the federal government over its efforts to protect greater sagegrouse, Gov. John Hickenlooper is trying to resolve state and local concerns through conversation rather than litigation.” Hickenlooper aide John Swartout, “who has worked as the governor’s point person on the issue, said Hickenlooper joined Govs. Matt Mead of Wyoming and Brian Sandoval of Nevada in meeting with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke more than a month ago.” Swartout said, “Our message was fix the plans but don’t scrap them. Don’t just jettison them.”
