The USGS deployed crews from Water Science Center offices in Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina in response to moderate and major flooding in the Piedmont region of Virginia, the Appalachian Plateaus of Virginia and West Virginia, and the Piedmont region of North Carolina. Crews, which began deploying on April 24, are making high flow discharge measurements, following consecutive days of rain totaling more than 5 inches in some areas.

Media of Interest

Trump To Order Review Of National Monument Designations.

The AP (4/25, Colvin, Daly) reports that President Trump will sign an executive order Wednesday directing Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “to review the designation of tens of millions of acres of land as ‘national monuments.’” According to Zinke, “the order will cover several dozen monuments across the country designated since 1996 that total 100,000 acres or more, including two recent monuments in Utah.” Zinke “says he’ll provide a preliminary review with a recommendation on Bears Ears in 45 days.”

Trump To Order Expansion Of Offshore Drilling.

The New York Times (4/25, Davenport) reports that President Trump on Friday will sign an executive order “aimed at opening up protected waters in the Atlantic and Arctic Oceans to offshore drilling.” Bloomberg Politics (4/25, Dlouhy) says that the order will set up “a certain clash with environmentalists.”

Anniston Officials Plan To Celebrate Freedom Riders Monument.

The Anniston (AL) Star (4/25, Burkhalter) reports that “Anniston city officials on Tuesday continued to plan a community celebration for the city’s Freedom Riders National Monument, to take place in May.” National Park Service officials will “host the celebration on May 13 between 3 p.m. and 7 p.m. at the former Greyhound bus station on Gurnee Avenue downtown.” Kent Davis, city manager, said Tuesday “that he doesn’t believe Anniston’s national monument is among those Trump’s administration is looking to review, and that the focus of much of the outcry has been largely in the West, where he said some recent national monuments were established without the support of local legislators.”

Appeals Court Lifts Injunction On Wolf Releases In New Mexico.

The AP (4/25, Elliott) reports that “a federal court on Tuesday removed an obstacle to the U.S. government’s plan to release more endangered wolves in New Mexico over the state’s objections, but it was not clear whether additional animals would be reintroduced under the Trump administration.” The 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals “lifted a temporary order issued by a lower court that stopped the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service from releasing more Mexican gray wolves after New Mexico refused to agree to the plan.” The state Game and Fish Department is “disappointed, but it will keep pursuing the case in federal court in New Mexico, where it was originally filed, spokesman Lance Cherry said.”
