Emergency Management

In Arizona, the Sawmill Fire, which began on April 23 in Pima County, is burning on state, U.S. Forest Service, and Bureau of Land Management Lands. To date, the fire has burned 40,356 acres and is 20-percent contained. The fire is being managed by a Type-2 Incident Management Team (IMT) with 606 personnel assigned, which includes 105 DOI personnel. There are 300 residential structures threatened and 412 evacuees at this time. The containment date has been set for May 3. The fire, beyond residential structures, also threatens community and utility infrastructure.

The Cowbell Fire in Florida has seen no notable change over the last reporting period, yielding 21,840 acres burned and 75-percent containment, with a containment date of April 30.

In Georgia, the West Mims Fire in the Okefenokee National Wildlife Refuge has burned 73,976 (+14,658) acres. The fire is 8 (no change)-percent contained and managed by a Type-2 IMT with 505 (+33) personnel, including 93 (+9) DOI personnel. There are 79 (no change) residences and 3 (no change) commercial structures threatened. The containment date is November 1.

The Poás Volcano, in Costa Rica, has been in an elevated state of eruptive activity since February 2017. On the night of April 25, the largest explosion in the current phase of activity occurred, destroying seismic monitoring stations and telemetry equipment installed near the summit crater. At the request of Observatorio Vulcanológico y Sismológico de Costa Rica (OVSICORI), the USGS Volcano Disaster Assistance Program (VDAP) is providing two seismic stations, two Differential Optical Absorption Spectroscopy (DOAS) gas sensors, telemetry equipment to replace the equipment destroyed in the April 25 explosion, and assistance with monitoring efforts.

Media of Interest

Trump Executive Order Directs Zinke To Review National Monument Designations.

Reuters (4/26, Volcovici) reports that, as “part of an effort to reverse many of the environmental protections implemented by” President Barack Obama, President Trump “signed an executive order to allow national monument designations to be rescinded or reduce the size of sites.” Trump called Obama’s use of the 1906 Antiquities Act to create monuments, in Reuters’ words, “an ‘egregious abuse of federal power’ that allowed the federal government to ‘lock up’ millions of acres of land and water.” Interior Secretary Zinke said he is required by the order to review about 30 national monuments and recommend which designations should be lifted or altered. He added that reversing a monument designation “is untested, as you know, whether the president can do that” and that he would seek input from locals before making recommendations.

The Washington Post (4/26, Eilperin) reports Zinke told reporters that, in the words of the Post, “he would keep an open mind as he scrutinized past monument designations and that in and of itself the order would not repeal any existing monuments.” He said the review will consider any “loss of jobs, reduced wages and reduced public access” due to areas being “put off limits for traditional uses, like farming, ranching, timber harvest, mining, oil and gas exploration, fishing, and motorized recreation.” He added, “By and large, the Antiquities Act and the monuments that we have protected have done a great service to the public and are some of our most treasured lands in this country. . . . Those out in the West would probably say it’s abused.” Zinke also said, “I’m not going to predispose what the outcome is going to be.”

Legislators Call For Release Of Report On Keeping Asian Carp From Great Lakes.

The Detroit News (4/26) reports that after legislators “met Tuesday evening at the U.S. Capitol with Trump administration officials, including representatives from the White House, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, U.S. Fish & Wildlife, the U.S. Geological Service and the Interior Department,” Michigan lawmakers say that “the White House is continuing to hold up the release of a draft plan to slow Asian carp from reaching the Great Lakes through the Illinois River” so that Administration officials can review concerns raised by downriver barge operators that “measures to fight the invasive species could affect waterway navigation.” The legislators call for the report to be released. Sen. Debbie Stabenow commented, “the fact is that U.S. Fish and Wildlife and the U.S. Geological Service — there’s wide array of people deeply concerned about this (issue).”

Trump Seeking To Remove Limits On Offshore Drilling.

CNBC (4/26, DiChristopher) reports President Trump plans to sign an executive order that will direct Interior Department Secretary Zinke “to review and in all likelihood throw out President Barack Obama’s plans for federally administered waters.” In seeking to remove Obama Administration limits on offshore drilling, “Trump’s easiest and least controversial option is to create a new five-year plan for auctioning off blocks of the U.S. Outer Continental Shelf,” although the Interior Department and its Bureau of Ocean Energy Management will have to “go through multiple stages including environmental impact studies and requests for public comments.” Trump also could challenge Obama’s using the Outer Continental Shelf Lands “to indefinitely block drilling in much of the U.S. Arctic off Alaska’s shores and parts of the northern Atlantic Ocean” or work with Congress “to open offshore waters for auction outside the OCSLA process.”

States Suing Interior Over Oil, Gas Royalties.

The Albuquerque (NM) Journal (4/26, Robinson-Avila) reports New Mexico and California are suing “Department of the Interior for postponing implementation of a rule that updates how federal royalties on oil, gas and coal extraction is calculated.” The agency postponed implementing the rules, which took effect in January, “until a legal challenge by industry groups is resolved.” The plaintiffs accuse the agency of “blocking payment of about $18 million in royalties owed to their states.”
