Thanks, but the issue is what comes out, not what goes in - if they do put their name in the comment, does DiscoverText sort for that absent it being specifically programmed to? (i.e. would its basic programming permit us to tell it to give us the names of everyone who provided them and submitted a comments on Bears Ears? We do not want that, but I need to know if the system automatically would provide that option, or if we would have to program it to do that.

Here's what the public sees when they enter comments.

First and last name are NOT required. When you hover over First Name and Last name, this message appears:

"Enter your name, or if you prefer not to be identified this field will subsequently populate with 'Anonymous'".

See Privacy Statement at bottom of screen.

The commenter has the option of entering their contact information and they indicate so by checking the box.

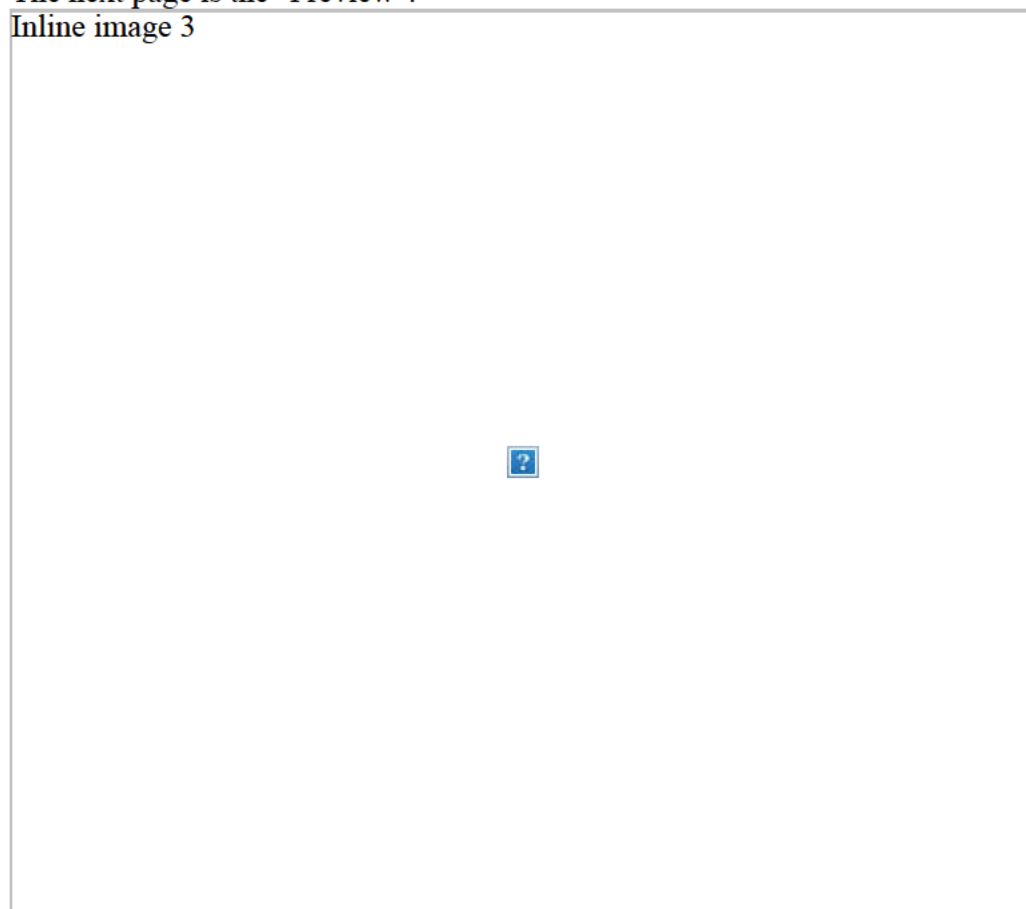

Same goes for Third Party section.

When they click on "Submit Comment", the next screen show the "Receipt" with the comment tracking number.

Hope this helps,
