Hi Randy,

I am not able to replicate that result and cannot comment on something I did not see first hand. When I search for "attack on America" all of the 3,979 results all have the phrase. Here the top of the list and you can see the search is working normally:

In general, based on your own statements and some of the confusion you have experienced, I am not sure you are the right person to be running live demonstrations of the software. I would be happy to schedule demonstrations to your supervisors as needed. I am able to run web meetings from Rome or when I return to the home office Friday.

Thanks,
Stu

I just met with the Secretary's Deputy Chief of Staff, who is the lead for his immediately office on the monuments review, and I was showing her how DiscoverText works.

She wanted to see some of the comments, so I picked one of the phrases I searched with on Memorial day - first one up, "attack on America", which had several thousand comments. While I searched with the phrase in quotation marks when establishing the dataset, the first comment in the dataset that she opened did not have either of the 3 words in it. The second had only "attack", while the 3rd had the full phrase. We were interrupted at that point, but the system is still open on her computer and she may well look at others in that dataset.

How often does this happen - searches turning up results not in the search term?

...al monuments, is an attack on America. We must protect the land, public access to these beauteous wonders, the plants and animals that live there and the people who depend on the economic benefits of tourism resulting from these parks. Thank you.
