

National Public Lands Day - Bureau of Land Management 2010 Report

Bureau of Land Management volunteer in Barstow, Ca.

The National Environmental Education Foundation (NEEF) provides knowledge to trusted professionals who, with their credibility, amplify messages to national audiences to solve everyday environmental problems. Together, we generate lasting positive change. NEEF partners with professionals in health, education, media, business and public land management to promote daily actions for helping people protect and enjoy the environment. Through our primary programs - Classroom Earth, National Public Lands Day, National Environmental Education Week, Business and Environment, Earth Gauge® and Health & Environment - we offer Americans knowledge to live by. National Public Lands Day Overview

National Public Lands Day (NPLD) is the nation's largest volunteer event focused on improving public lands. Each year, thousands of Americans come together on a Saturday in late September to volunteer their time to improve parks, recreation areas, trails and historic sites throughout the country.

On September 25, 2010, over 2,080 public lands sites hosted events with an attendance of approximately 170,000 volunteers. Their efforts resulted in an estimated $15 million dollars in improvements to the public land areas Americans utilize every day for recreational and educational activities. Volunteers improved their public lands by removing 450 tons of trash; collecting 20,000 lbs of invasive plant species; building and maintaining 1,320 miles of trails and planting 100,000 trees, shrubs and other native plants, among other projects.

This success is in part due to the unprecedented level of support received from the federal government. Along with eight federal agencies hosting volunteer events, the Environmental Protection Agency recognized NPLD as a day of service and invited staff to attend volunteer events across the country. Federal dignitaries including Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar, EPA Administrator Lisa Jackson and White House Council on Environmental Quality Chair Nancy Sutley spoke at signature sites. They acknowledged the importance of volunteerism, recreation and public lands to the health of individuals and communities. These same themes were included as part of the National Public Lands Day Presidential Proclamation. For the second year, President Obama wrote a proclamation stressing the need for Americans to "to give their time and energy to care for - and to go out and enjoy - our public lands." The proclamation was distributed to sites and read across the country as part of the day's opening ceremonies.

Since NPLD's inception in 1994, the Bureau of Land Management has been an important federal partner and champion of the program. Starting with two sites in 1994, participation within the Bureau of Land Management has grown each year. This year, 230 Bureau of Land Management sites hosted NPLD events. The Bureau of Land Management supports the efforts on the ground by distributing materials and shirts to all participating sites, producing press releases and promoting the yearly educational themes. With the support of the Bureau of Land Management, NPLD has been able to grow into a preeminent public land volunteer event.

National Public Lands Day 2010 Accomplishments

National Public Lands Day Growth

2010 had the highest participation of sites and volunteers in the history of the program. An estimated 170,000 people volunteered at 2,086 sites. NPLD sites were located in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and Guam. At these sites, over 2,800 different projects were completed. NPLD resulted in an estimated $15 million of improvements to public lands.

Signature Sites

Seven public lands were chosen to be “signature sites.” They featured dignitaries, guest speakers, special volunteer activities and ceremonies. The signature sites attracted media attention and served as models for other public lands and volunteers.

The seven signature sites were:

- Big Branch Marsh National Wildlife Refuge, Louisiana
- Kenilworth Park and Aquatic Gardens, Washington, D.C.
- Barton Creek Greenbelt, Austin, Texas
- Midewin National Tallgrass Prairie, Wilmington, Illinois
- Martin Luther King, Jr. National Historic Site, Atlanta, Georgia
- Fort Washington Park, New York, New York
- Rocky Mountain National Park, Estes Park, Colorado

Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar planting marsh grasses at Big Branch Marsh National Wildlife Refuge

At Big Branch Marsh National Wildlife Refuge, Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar joined volunteers helping to restore threatened marshes along the Gulf Coast. He spoke to the crowd of volunteers about the importance of the Gulf Coast region and the need for continued restoration work in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina and the Deepwater Horizon oil spill. After Secretary Salazar planted marsh grasses with volunteers, he joined Robb Hampton, director of National Public Lands Day, to tour areas within the refuge.

EPA Administrator Lisa Jackson and White House Council on Environmental Quality Chair Nancy Sutley, were among those who spoke at Kenilworth Park and Aquatic Gardens. Lisa Jackson and several enthusiastic Girl Scouts announced the official start of NPLD with a reading of the 2010 Presidential Proclamation. After the opening ceremonies, Lisa Jackson, Nancy Sutley and other dignitaries joined Diane Wood, president of the National Environmental Education Foundation, to plant trees in honor of the 17th annual National Public Lands Day. Over 200 volunteers prepared Kenilworth Park and Aquatic Gardens for the winter months by removing dead plants, clearing trails, planting trees, mulching and raking.

The largest National Public Lands Day signature site event occurred at Martin Luther King, Jr. National Historic Site in Atlanta, Ga. Over 300 volunteers helped to restore the historic buildings that were important in shaping the life of Dr. King. During the opening ceremonies, the volunteers were greeted by guest speakers including Stan Meiburg, EPA Region 4 deputy director, and Greening Youth Foundation executive director, Angelou Ezeilo.

Partnerships

National Public Lands Day's continued growth is due to the program's ability to form new partnerships with governments, nonprofits and businesses while strengthening relationships with existing partners.

The program's oldest and strongest relationships continue to be with the federal government. In 2010, eight federal agencies, including the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Bureau of Land Management, Bureau of Reclamation, Department of Defense, Environmental Protection Agency, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, National Park Service and the USDA Forest Service accounted for over 40% of all NPLD sites. The Environmental Protection Agency designated it as an optional day of voluntary service for employees.

Volunteers clearing a trail at Kenilworth Park and Aquatic Gardens

Along with hosting volunteer events, federal agencies advertised NPLD and continued the fee-free coupon distribution program. Everyone who volunteered on federal land during NPLD received a fee-free coupon to return to a federal public land at no cost for one day during the next year. The fee-free coupons are one of the most popular features of NPLD. They are consistently requested by land managers for their volunteers. The fee-free program is so successful that the National Park System declared National Public Lands Day a fee-free day for all visitors.

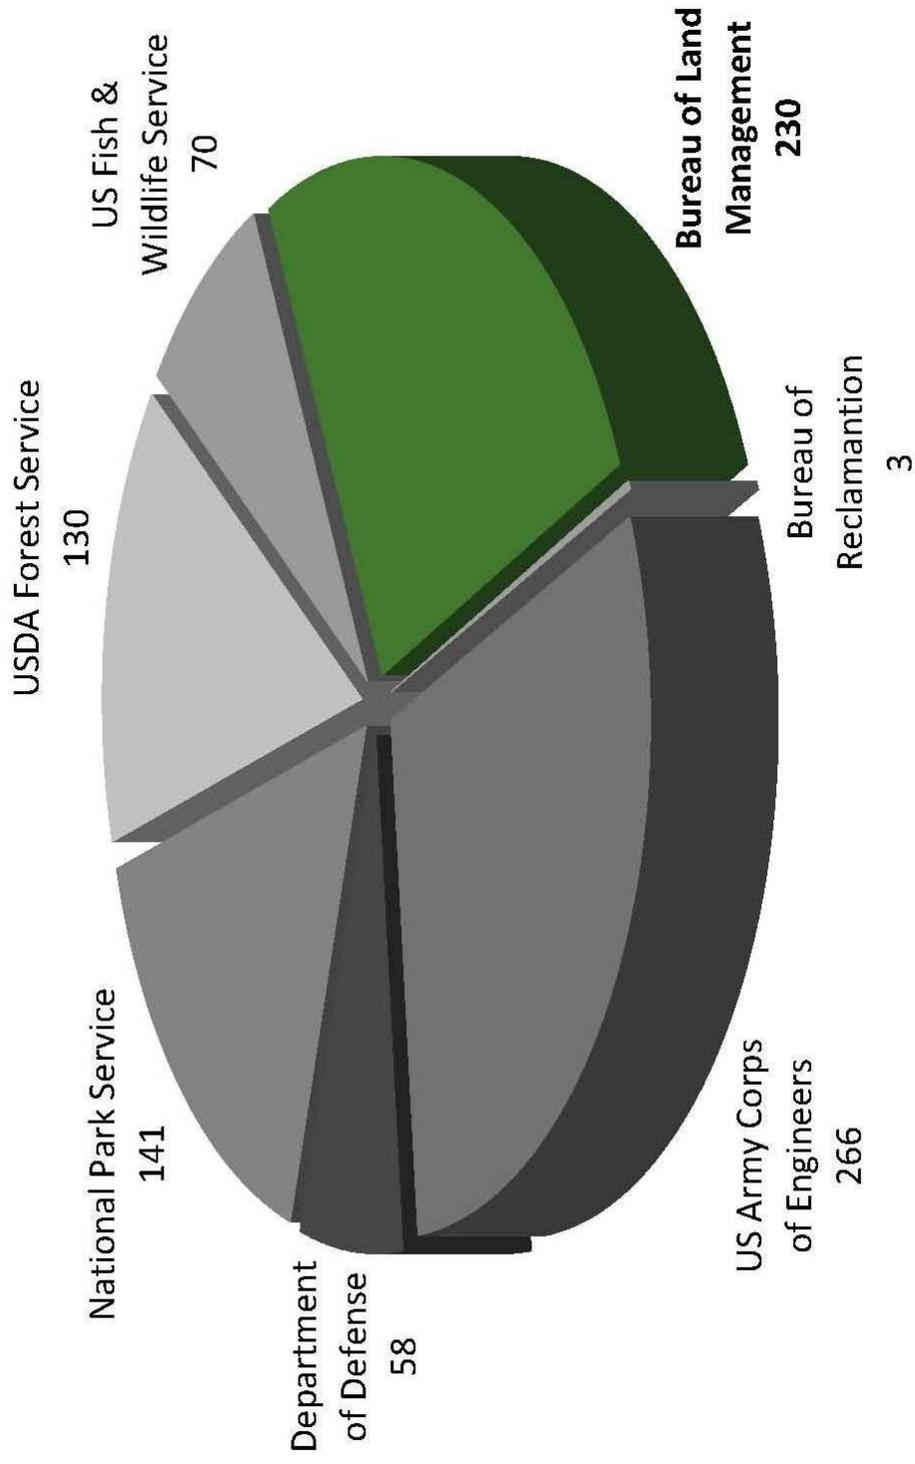

Volunteers assisting the Delaware Center for Horticulture at Stapler Park

National Public Lands Day reached out to state, regional and local governments to encourage them to host volunteer events. Kentucky, Tennessee and Pennsylvania signed memorandums of mutual support with NPLD that resulted in over 50 state parks hosting volunteer events within the three states. Overall, 32 state agencies and almost 100 local and regional government agencies hosted events in 2010.

Although all NPLD events occur on public lands, not all are hosted by the public land managers. Some are planned and implemented by local nonprofits and "friends groups" affiliated with public lands. 184 nonprofits and friends groups hosted National Public Lands Day events in 2010. They ranged from small friends groups with no staff and minimal funding to large state and regional nonprofits such as Stop Oregon Litter and Vandalism (SOLV) and the San Diego River Parks Foundation.

National Public Lands Day continues to have strong and fruitful partnerships with the Girl Scouts of America and the Boy Scouts of the USA. In 2010, 333 scout troops participated in volunteer projects. Every scout that attended an NPLD volunteer event was given a special certificate recognizing their contribution to the community. Girl Scouts were also eligible to earn a Get with the Land patch.

2010 National Public Lands Day Federal Agency Site Totals

Two nonprofit partners of special significance were World Water Monitoring Day and KaBoom! They provided free materials, educational content and resources to site managers. World Water Monitoring Day donated over 100 water quality test kits to site managers. Many of the sites that received the kits had scout troops or children participating in NPLD. They were able to add a fun, educational component to the day's events. Similarly, site managers that registered with KaBoom! were eligible for Play Day grants to improve the quality and infrastructure of public playgrounds.

Presidential Proclamation

For the second year in a row, National Public Lands Day received a Presidential Proclamation from President Barack Obama. He declared September 25, 2010 as a national day of service for public lands. Site managers were encouraged to read the proclamation at the beginning of volunteer activities.

Several site managers commented that the reading of the Presidential Proclamation was a highlight of the day and an inspiration to volunteers.

EPA Administrator Lisa Jackson and local Girl Scouts read the NPLD Presidential Proclamation at Kenilworth Park and Aquatic Gardens

“Taking care of our public lands is and must continue to be a proud American tradition.” - President Barack Obama

Gubernatorial and Mayoral Proclamations

National Public Lands Day received 38 gubernatorial proclamations and two mayoral proclamations including:

National Public Lands Day in the News

The National Environmental Education Foundation facilitated the production of PSAs, news clips and TV, radio and online coverage. A Google news search after NPLD found 10 pages of stories, including articles by The Washington Post, The Chicago Sun-Times, San Diego Tribune, The Miami Herald and Huffington Post.

Broadcast news segments on NPLD aired in several major media markets, including Los Angeles, Philadelphia and Houston. A survey conducted by Video Monitoring Service found 170 television news segments about NPLD, ranging from interviews with

National Public Lands Day, 2010

By the President of the United States of America

A Proclamation

From majestic mountain ranges to beloved neighborhood parks, Americans enjoy the natural places our ancestors have celebrated and protected for centuries. Our public lands represent the American spirit and reflect our shared experience—our history, our culture, and our deep love for wild and beautiful places. Every September, thousands of Americans volunteer their time and talents to protect our parks, national forests, wildlife refuges, and other public lands. National Public Lands Day is an occasion to join together in honor of our Nation's unique natural treasures.

Every year, Americans take this opportunity to conserve and restore our public places. Last year, an estimated 150,000 dedicated volunteers removed litter and invasive plants; cleaned water resources; built and maintained trails; and planted trees, shrubs, and other native plants. This year, I encourage even more Americans to volunteer in local projects to have a greater impact on parks and public lands across our Nation.

Taking care of our public lands is and must continue to be a proud American tradition. In April, I hosted the White House Conference on America's Great Outdoors to address challenges and opportunities surrounding conservation today, and to identify new ways to work together to preserve our natural bounty. I also inaugurated the America's Great Outdoors Initiative to build a conservation agenda for the 21st century, and to reconnect Americans to our great outdoors. To do this, I instructed my Administration to participate in listening sessions around the country to hear Americans' concerns, and to learn about what citizens and communities are doing to safeguard our land, water, and wildlife, as well as places of historic and cultural significance. As a Nation, we must engage in a new conversation about the conservation of the cherished places that have helped define us.

On this day of service and celebration, I encourage all Americans to give their time and energy to care for—and to go out and enjoy—our public lands. Together, we can build upon our history of stewardship so our unique landscapes are preserved for countless generations to come.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, BARACK OBAMA, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim September 25, 2010, as National Public Lands Day. I invite all Americans to join me in a day of service for our public lands.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this twenty-fourth day of September, in the year of our Lord two thousand ten, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and thirty-fifth.

volunteers in Alaska to stories featuring National Public Lands Day director Robb Hampton with Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar on the Gulf Coast.

Philippe Cousteau, co-founder of EarthEcho and board member of the National Environmental Education Foundation, filmed two public service announcements for NPLD. The one-minute version was watched by thousands on YouTube, while a number of television stations aired the 30-second spot. Cousteau also recorded a 30-second audio public service announcement.

In an effort to reach the urban demographic of South Florida, Manuel Diaz, former mayor of Miami, recorded two audio public service announcements, one in each English and Spanish. Manuel is a new National Environmental Education Foundation board member and he supported National Public Lands Day efforts to reach new volunteers in Spanish-speaking communities.

The usage of social media as a marketing tool was greatly expanded in 2010. National Public Lands Day utilized Facebook, Twitter, Flickr, Gowalla and YouTube to provide up-to-date news, photos, videos, press releases and site information. One Twitter message was “re-tweeted” more than 40,000 times. The use of social media expanded NPLD’s reach to new audiences and kept the program connected to volunteers throughout the year.

Grants

In early 2010, the Public Lands Program distributed ten Capacity Building Grants of $1,000 each to public land “friends groups.” The Capacity Building Grants were designed to strengthen the organizational effectiveness of community-based nonprofits. The Louisville Olmsted Parks Conservancy, the Nevada Outdoor School, Wissahickon Restoration Volunteers and the Continental Trail Divide Alliance were just a few of the organizations awarded Capacity Building Grants.

Sponsors

For 12 years, Toyota has been the national corporate sponsor of National Public Lands Day. They support the daily activities of National Public Lands Day as well as the Every Day Grants program. Toyota encourages employee participation in National Public Lands Day through employee sponsored volunteer events at public lands near Toyota facilities. This National Public Lands Day, more than 3,500 Toyota employees volunteered at 41 public land sites in 18 states and Puerto Rico.

Northrup Grumman Corporation is a continuing sponsor of National Public Lands Day. Employees are invited to attend NPLD events across the country and improve the quality of public lands.

Bureau of Land Management Site Growth

In 2010, the number of Bureau of Land Management sites participating in NPLD increased by 20% from the previous year to a total of 230 sites and approximately 13,000 volunteers. This is the third consecutive year of growth for the Bureau of Land Management with participation increasing by over 54% since 2007. With reliable site growth and communications support the Bureau of Land Management has consistently demonstrated why it is one of the principle partners of NPLD.

The scope and diversity of the volunteer projects performed on NPLD has also increased. Interesting Bureau of Land Management service projects included:

- The construction of one mile of equestrian trail in Gunnison Gorge National Conservation Area;
- A tree-planting and trail clean-up at Challis Bridge Day Use Area followed by Take It Outside! educational programming;
- Marking rangeland fences to prevent human-wildlife conflicts and injury to sage grouse;
- The Carson River Cleanup with an attendance of over 150 volunteers to remove trash from the watershed;
- Clearing an illegal dump site near the entrance to the Prehistoric Trackways National Monument;
- The building of 2,200 feet of buck-and-rail fencing around sensitive dune habitat within the Black Rock Desert-High Rock Canyon Emigrant Trails National Conservation Area;
- The revitalization of a degraded campsite with new picnic tables and fire rings;
- A long-term project for high school students to plant 960 willow tree saplings;
- Landscape restoration around the Campbell Creek Science Center;
- Trash and debris collection by kayak along the three mile shoreline of the Gila River;
- A partnership with the US Forest Service to remove fire rings from the Santa Rosa and San Jacinto Mountains National Monument;
- The stabilization of a historic stone corral and livestock loading ramp;
- The removal of man-made dams that prevented the movement of cutthroat trout;
- Cave tours and preparing the Fort Stanton-Snowy River Cave National Conservation Area for the Fort Stanton Cave Study Project Expedition;
- Four volunteer events to clear trail, mark boundaries and plant trees so hikers and off-road vehicles can both enjoy the public land;
- Water drainage improvement work within the Cucharas Canyon Recreation Area;
- The fifth annual clean-up of the St. Anthony Sand Dunes by over 450 Brigham Young University – Idaho students and faculty;
- The removal of 2,650 feet of barbed- and woven-wire fence, the construction of two hitching posts and the revitalization of stock fences and bridges; and
- A four day camping trip down the Colorado River where 40 volunteers removed invasive species.

Comments from Bureau of Land Management Site Managers

At one point one of the boys looked up at the clear blue sky and then looked around at the rugged beauty of Lamoille Canyon and said, "Wow, this may be community service, but that doesn't mean we can't enjoy it."
– Steven Craddock, Lamoille Canyon, Nevada

National Public Lands Day helped to start a partnership with Natrona County High School junior ROTC class that has lasted ten years. The students look forward to each year's event and it has turned into a tradition. Students can be seen throughout the town proudly wearing their t-shirts even years after they have graduated. – Eve Bennett, Muddy Mountain Environmental Education Area, Wyoming

My reward was a hug from a retired game warden who looks after the River Springs area once a week. He was thankful for the efforts of all the folks sharing their time in caring for land. – Jeff Starosta, River Springs, California

We promoted the event to underserved audiences, and even arranged for bus transportation to bring 40 refugees to the event. The refugees recently moved to Anchorage from Sudan, Somalia, and Palestine through the local Catholic Social Services Refugee Assistance Program. – Jeff Brune, Campbell Tract, Alaska

The community aspect of NPLD helps galvanize local support and appreciation for BLM lands and resources right outside Kanab's front and back doors. – Tom Christensen and Misti Haines, Kanab City, Utah

This event provided opportunities for community members and staff to work towards a common goal. As people worked side by side, friendships were forged, and common interests and excitement about the site were shared. Plus the work accomplished was tremendous. – Carrie Karl, West Eugene Wetlands, Oregon

National Public Lands Day provided an opportunity for people who enjoy nature to make a valuable contribution to caring for the public land they love, and have a wonderful time doing it. – Steven Craddock, Lamoille Canyon, Nevada

We really focused on the public helping agencies take care of the areas they love to recreate in. Lots of people walked by thanking all of the volunteers for working on the trail and cleaning up the byway. – Kalem Lenard, Royal Gorge Field Office, Colorado

By far our largest NPLD event with over 160 volunteers. It was quite amazing the turnout and how successful each location was. – Janelle Alleman, Angel Peak Scenic Area, New Mexico

The project site is an extremely popular recreation area and after the project was complete volunteers could see how they had played a role in improving recreation opportunities available in the area. – Matt McGrath, Colorado River Ruby-Horsetheif, Colorado

Public lands day gives us a chance to meet our interested public and recruit volunteers for other worthy projects throughout the year. The free tee-shirts are a big help. Volunteers like the shirts. – David Draheim, Boise, Idaho

The ability to gather a diverse audience of adult and youth volunteers in an effort to build camaraderie and the growth of partnerships, devoted to enhanced stewardship of our nation's public lands. – Cory Roegner, Black Rock Desert, Nevada

We focused on improving quality of recreational experience by improving recreational facilities and cleaning up recreation sites. It's a chance to get out to the public lands that we serve, and work with interested volunteers cooperatively and in friendship. It is a great program - I hope it continues for a long, long time. – Steve A. Smith, Yakima River Canyon, Washington

We were able to educate a group of interested young men about the importance and need of maintaining a natural riparian area in an area where there are very few. – James Scott Ford, Gila Box Natural Riparian National Conservation Area, Arizona
