

Bureau of Land Management National Wild Horse and Burro Program

BLM Accepting Public Ideas for Potential Competition

BLM is exploring the possibility of launching a prize-based competition as part of its efforts to improve the management of wild horses and burros. The competition will aim to find innovative solutions to this important and complex issue. BLM is currently in the design phase of the project; formulating the requirements, parameters, and scope of the potential challenge question(s).

The public can get involved in this design phase by sharing their views on how BLM can best target the competition in order to solicit the most practical, innovative ideas that ensure healthy animals on healthy rangelands. The most helpful submissions will answer the following questions:

1. Which general approaches do you see as the most promising for helping BLM to effectively manage wild horses and burros?
2. Do you believe there are obstacles preventing BLM from adopting your recommended approaches? (You may want to consider technological, market, social or legal obstacles).

Members of the public are welcome to submit their input to WildHorse@blm.gov with "Prize" in the subject line.

