Subject: MUSTANGS

It has come to my attention that once again the issue of land use has surfaced in regard to the American mustang. I can't see the problem when I view facts as to how few horses are present on so much land. There is no way that so few animals can be destructive to such vast ranges. The problem is that there are people who covet what is Federal and Public Property all to them-selves and are willing to exert whatever pressure it takes upon public caretakers and wildlife to rid our national grazing lands of anything that does not afford them personal profit.

Cattle and horses do quite well together. Apparently it is the public interest and private interests that lack harmony. Too long, private interests have dominated the scene. Whatever money wants money gets. It is time for a change. Look at the limited numbers of equines under your jurisdiction and make a believable decision so that we can believe that officialdom is really in place to protect OUR LAND AND ALL ITS RESOURCES, including the sentient.

Thank you for your consideration of these comments.
